1993 Amendment: Chapter 407 in (1) substituted "disability" for "handicap".

Preamble: The preamble attached to Ch. 407, L. 1993, provided: "WHEREAS, many individuals with disabilities and many organizations representing individuals with disabilities object to the use of the terms "handicap" and "handicapped person"; and

WHEREAS, as with racial and ethnic terms, the choice of words used to describe a person with a disability is overlaid with stereotypes and emotional connotations; and

WHEREAS, it is important to use terminology most in line with the sensibilities of most persons with disabilities; and

WHEREAS, the current accepted terminology is "disability" rather than "handicap" and "person with a disability" rather than "handicapped person"; and

WHEREAS, the federal Americans with Disabilities Act of 1990 uses the terms "disability" and "individual with a disability" rather than the terms "handicap" or "handicapped person"; and

WHEREAS, making the state human rights laws consistent with the Americans with Disabilities Act will eliminate some confusion between state and federal laws.

THEREFORE, it is appropriate for the Legislature to revise the state human rights laws to replace the terms "handicap" and "handicapped person" with the terms "disability" and "person with a disability"."

1991 Amendment: Inserted (2) concerning consideration of factors in adoption proceedings; and made minor change in style. Amendment effective July 1, 1991.

Severability: Section 7, Ch. 682, L. 1991, was a severability clause.

Case Notes

Direct Evidence of Discriminatory Intent — Standard of Proof — Heiat Criteria Applicable to Cases Involving Circumstantial Evidence: The summary judgment burdens of proof discussed in Heiat v. E. Mont. College, 275 M 322, 912 P2d 787 (1996), are not limited only to cases of sex discrimination brought under federal law, but rather apply in all types of discrimination cases whether based on federal or state law. However, the Heiat test is confined to use in cases in which discriminatory intent can only be proved by circumstantial evidence. In a direct evidence case, one in which the parties do not dispute the reason for the employer's action but only whether that action is illegal discrimination, the standard is that the employer must prove by a preponderance of the evidence that an unlawful motive played no role in the challenged action or that the direct evidence of discrimination is not credible and is unworthy of belief. That method of proof, as set out in ARM 24.9.610(5), is the proper test in cases in which the plaintiff presents direct evidence of discrimination. Traditional summary judgment principles apply to direct evidence discrimination cases, requiring the moving party to establish that no material issues of fact exist and that the movant is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. If the employer is the moving party, the employer has the burden of showing that no issues of material fact remain and that plaintiff cannot prove a prima facie case of discrimination as a matter of law. Reeves v. Dairy Queen, Inc., 1998 MT 13, 287 M 196, 953 P2d 703, 55 St. Rep. 44 (1998), clarified and followed in Hafner v. Conoco, Inc., 1999 MT 68, 293 M 542, 977 P2d 330, 56 St. Rep. 277 (1999). See also Stuart v. First Sec. Bank, Havre, 2000 MT 309, 302 M 431, 15 P3d 1198, 57 St. Rep. 1309 (2000) (the Heiat test was applied in determining that the bank's reasons for denying an agricultural loan to Native Americans were not a pretext for discrimination).

Disability Determination on Case-by-Case Basis — High Blood Pressure as Disability: Whether a person is disabled under Title 49, ch. 2, commonly known as the Montana Human Rights Act, cannot be decided as a matter of law, but rather requires a factual determination to be made on a case-by-case basis. Under 49-4-101, to establish a prima facie case of discrimination in employment, an employee must show that the employee belonged to a protected class, that the employee was otherwise qualified for continued employment and that the employment did not subject the employee or others to physical harm, and that continued employment was denied because of the employee's disability. A person is entitled to the protections of the Act not only if the person suffers from a substantially limiting impairment, but also if the person suffers from a condition that is regarded as such an impairment. High blood pressure is an example of a perceived disability. It is no more legal to discriminate against one who exhibits symptoms of a disease than to discriminate against one who suffers from the disease itself. In this case, Reeves was terminated because, in the employer's own words, "it was a combination of having high blood pressure and working in a position as a fast order cook working under conditions of pressure, stress and heat . . . and I decided this would be best for Donna". Reeves met the test for proving a prima facie case under 49-4-101. The District Court erred in summarily dismissing Reeves' claim, and the case was remanded for further proceedings. Reeves v. Dairy Queen, Inc., 1998 MT 13, 287 M 196, 953 P2d 703, 55 St. Rep. 44 (1998).

No Right to Jury Trial on Discrimination Claim: It was not error to bifurcate a discrimination claim based on Title 49, ch. 2, commonly known as the Montana Human Rights Act, from a wrongful discharge claim and to refuse a jury trial on the former. Sullivan v. Sisters of Charity of Providence of Mont., 268 M 71, 885 P2d 488, 51 St. Rep. 1193 (1994).

Elements of Federal ADEA Claim: To establish a prima facie case under the federal Age Discrimination in Employment Act, one must either provide direct evidence of discrimination or present evidence that the plaintiff was in the protected age group, was performing the job satisfactorily, was discharged, and was replaced by a substantially younger person. The employer then has the burden to articulate a nondiscriminatory reason for the discharge, after which the plaintiff has to prove by a preponderance of the evidence that the employer's reasons are a pretext for discrimination. Tonack v. Mont. Bank of Billings, 258 M 247, 854 P2d 326, 50 St. Rep. 518 (1993).

Federal ADEA Claim Proved by Forty-Nine-Year-Old Woman Bank Employee: Violation of the federal Age Discrimination in Employment Act was shown by a 49-year-old bank employee who presented evidence that: (1) the bank holding company president thought she was too old and should be gotten rid of and that her supervisor would take care of it; (2) she had satisfactory performance reviews and was recently employee of the month; (3) she was erroneously placed on probation by her supervisor after many years of service; (4) before she was fired, business cards had been ordered with her title and a newly hired employee's name; (5) she was fired for not carrying out her supervisor's order to train the new employee for her type of position even though the plaintiff had merely postponed the training because the new employee's temporary replacement for the training period did not show up for work; and (6) the new employee was given her position after she was fired. Tonack v. Mont. Bank of Billings, 258 M 247, 854 P2d 326, 50 St. Rep. 518 (1993).

Proof Forty-Nine-Year-Old Woman Replaced by Substantially Younger Person: In an action under the federal Age Discrimination in Employment Act, a finding that the plaintiff bank employee was replaced by a substantially younger employee was supported by her supervisor's deposition stating that another employee who had resigned withdrew her resignation after the plaintiff was discharged and assumed some of the plaintiff's duties and by the plaintiff's testimony that the other employee was much younger than the plaintiff. Tonack v. Mont. Bank of Billings, 258 M 247, 854 P2d 326, 50 St. Rep. 518 (1993).

Proof of Age Discrimination Against Forty-Nine-Year-Old Woman: In an action under the federal Age Discrimination in Employment Act, findings concerning the bank holding company president's discrimination toward a discharged 49-year-old female bank employee were supported by testimony of the bank vice president that the president said that he did not believe the plaintiff was right for her position because of her age and background, that he had encouraged those responsible to make a change because he did not want the plaintiff in her position, and that he felt that the plaintiff's supervisor (who later fired the plaintiff) would "get it handled". The finding that the president could influence hiring and firing was supported by the vice president's testimony that the president could prevent the vice president from making the plaintiff the teller supervisor. Tonack v. Mont. Bank of Billings, 258 M 247, 854 P2d 326, 50 St. Rep. 518 (1993).

Recovery Under Both Wrongful Discharge Act and Federal ADEA Barred: The Montana Wrongful Discharge From Employment Act provides that it does not apply to a discharge subject to any other state or federal statute providing a remedy. A discharged bank employee could not recover under both the wrongful discharge act and the federal Age Discrimination in Employment Act. Concurrent claims may be filed under the wrongful discharge act and under any other state or federal statutes, but if the plaintiff obtains an affirmative determination under the other statutes, the wrongful discharge claim no longer applies. The Supreme Court declined to follow two recent Montana federal District Court cases allowing concurrent actions based on separate and distinct factual predicates, and to the extent that this conclusion changes the holding in Deeds v. Decker Coal Co., 246 M 220, 805 P2d 1270 (1990), the opinion in that case is modified. In this case, the claims were made in the same action, and once it was determined that the federal Age Discrimination in Employment Act was violated, the wrongful discharge act did not apply. Tonack v. Mont. Bank of Billings, 258 M 247, 854 P2d 326, 50 St. Rep. 518 (1993).

Limitation of Testimony of Statistician With Regard to Age Discrimination — Union Versus Nonunion Employees: The District Court correctly limited the age discrimination testimony of plaintiff's statistical expert to testimony of statistical tests performed only on nonunion employees when the inclusion of union employees (whose employment contracts contained seniority rights) in the statistical population would skew the figures affecting older terminated nonunion employees as to the probability that older nonunion employees were discriminated against on the basis of age. Mahan v. Farmers Union Cent. Exch., Inc., 235 M 410, 768 P2d 850, 46 St. Rep. 96 (1989).

Investigation of Human Rights Violations — Personnel Files: The Human Rights Commission (HRC) requested access to personnel files in connection with its investigation of a discrimination complaint. The court found that information sought by the HRC is protected by the right of privacy. The court also found that a sufficient showing of compelling state interest was made under Art. II, sec. 4, Mont. Const., and Title 49, ch. 2, allowing the HRC access to the information. To protect the privacy of the individuals whose files are disclosed, the court directed that the HRC may not disclose the information unless it is altered so as to provide for the anonymity of the persons involved. If the information must be released in such a way as to disclose the identity of the persons involved, HRC must, prior to the release, obtain an order from the District Court authorizing the release. Mont. Human Rights Div. v. Billings, 199 M 434, 649 P2d 1283, 39 St. Rep. 1504 (1982), followed in Flesh v. Bd. of Trustees, 241 M 158, 786 P2d 4, 47 St. Rep. 161 (1990).

Case Notes

"Stop and Frisk" by Private Security Guard Held Proper: A "stop and frisk" by a private security guard of a suspected thief on the hotel grounds was justifiable as an action taken to protect the hotel and its occupants against trespassers in the process of committing an offense, since a person has the right to use any necessary force to protect himself or his employer or his employer's property from wrongful injury. St. v. Bradford, 210 M 130, 683 P2d 924, 41 St. Rep. 962 (1984).

Right to Kill Game Out of Season: A defendant accused of killing an elk out of season may interpose the defense of legal justification when he claims that he acted in defense of property. This section and 87-3-104 (now repealed) must be read together to avoid an unconstitutional denial of an inalienable right. St. v. Rathbone, 110 M 225, 100 P2d 86 (1940).

Burden of Proof That Force Excessive: When plaintiff and her husband were trespassers upon the property of defendant and at least contributed to provoke an alleged assault by defendant, the burden was upon them to prove that the force used by defendant in repelling the trespass was excessive. Therefore, an instruction that the burden rested upon defendant to justify the means employed in trying to evict plaintiff was erroneous. Vaughn v. Mesch, 107 M 498, 87 P2d 177 (1939).

Exemplary Damages: While it is a sound rule that exemplary damages are not recoverable in an assault case when provocation furnished by the plaintiff affords a reasonable excuse for the assault, the rule that if a defendant uses excessive or unwarranted force in repelling the aggressor, such damages may be awarded is equally well settled. When malice is alleged, it is not quantum of force used but whether the assailant was in a malicious state of mind which is the test in awarding exemplary damages. Use of a dangerous weapon (a hammer) is some evidence of wanton disregard of human life and generally gives rise to such damages. The question of malice is generally one for the jury. Vaughn v. Mesch, 107 M 498, 87 P2d 177 (1939).

Chapter Administrative Rules

Title 24, chapter 8, ARM Human Rights Bureau.

Chapter Case Notes

Conduct of City Council Meeting Hearing Criticism of City Employee — Not Restricted by Free Speech and Privileged Communication Cases and Statute — Not Legislative Act Shielded by Legislative Immunity: Denke filed complaints with the Human Rights Commission alleging that Thompson Falls and Shoemaker, a City Council member, retaliated against her for previously filing sexual harassment charges with the Commission by holding a City Council meeting at which Shoemaker was allowed, with virtually no limitation, to severely criticize her conduct as city clerk and finance officer. The Commission hearing examiner, the Commission, and the District Court held that Shoemaker's criticism of Denke's actions as city bookkeeper aired during the City Council meeting was a "legislative act" within the meaning of 2-9-111 and the city was therefore immune from a charge of retaliation. The Supreme Court held that 27-1-804(2) and free speech cases such as New York Times Co. v. Sullivan, 376 US 254 (1964), and Skinner v. Pistoria, 194 M 257, 633 P2d 672 (1981), did not limit the City Council's ability to regulate the time, place, and manner of Shoemaker's criticism. The Supreme Court also held that Denke's claim did not involve the calling of the City Council meeting (for which the city would be immune under 2-9-114) so much as the manner in which the meeting was conducted and that the conduct of the meeting did not fall within the definition of a "legislative act", and remanded the case for further proceedings. Denke v. Shoemaker, 2008 MT 418, 347 M 322, 198 P3d 284 (2008).

District Court Order Denying Petition for Judicial Review of Human Rights Commission Order Held Overbroad — District Court Ruling Held Premature and Held to Be Sua Sponte Reversal of Ruling Previously Forfeited: Denke filed complaints with the Human Rights Commission alleging that Thompson Falls and Shoemaker, a City Council member, retaliated against her for previously filing sexual harassment charges with the Commission by writing letters to the newspaper and holding a City Council meeting at which Shoemaker was allowed, with virtually no limitation, to severely criticize her conduct as city clerk and finance officer. In denying a petition for judicial review of the decision of the Commission hearing officer, the District Court held that Thompson Falls was not liable for Councilman Shoemaker's letters to the editor or for comments made by those attending the City Council meeting because of 27-1-804, protecting privileged communication, and the Montana Supreme Court case of Skinner v. Pistoria, 194 M 257, 633 P2d 672 (1981). The Supreme Court held that this statement in the District Court's order denying Denke's petition for judicial review was overbroad and had to be vacated because: (1) Denke did not seek to hold anyone at the City Council meeting liable for their statements except Shoemaker; (2) proceedings in the District Court against Shoemaker were stayed by his bankruptcy proceeding and the statement was therefore premature; and (3) the hearing examiner determined that 27-1-804 didn't apply to Shoemaker's letters to the editor and Shoemaker had previously forfeited his appeal on this issue in Shoemaker v. Denke, 2004 MT 11, 319 M 238, 84 P3d 4 (2004). The Supreme Court held that the District Court therefore wasn't in a position to rule that Shoemaker's letters were privileged. Denke v. Shoemaker, 2008 MT 418, 347 M 322, 198 P3d 284 (2008).

Respondeat Superior Applicable to City Council Member Who Severely Criticized City Employee — Criticism Within Scope of Employment for Respondeat Superior but Not for Application of Legislative Immunity: Shoemaker, a member of the Thompson Falls City Council, severely criticized Denke, the city clerk and finance officer, in two letters to the editor and in a City Council meeting for her job performance that Shoemaker alleged caused the city to hire a CPA. Denke charged that Shoemaker's criticism was unlawful retaliatory conduct for her previous filing of a sexual harassment complaint against the Mayor. Following Kenyon v. Stillwater County, 254 M 142, 835 P2d 742 (1992), the Supreme Court held that Shoemaker was a city employee. The Supreme Court held that Shoemaker was acting as a member of the City Council when he signed the letters and that the city had admitted in an administrative hearing that Shoemaker was within the scope of his employment. The court held that: (1) Shoemaker didn't have to be Denke's supervisor for purposes of applying respondeat superior; (2) Shoemaker's unlawful retaliatory conduct was not within the official discharge of Shoemaker's duties for the purposes of legislative immunity under 27-1-804, but the conduct was within the scope of Shoemaker's employment for purposes of respondeat superior; and (3) the statement of the city in the Human Rights Commission administrative hearing that Shoemaker was acting as a member of the City Council constituted a judicial admission, was an "acknowledgment" under 2-9-305, and was binding upon the city for the purposes of its liability for retaliation. Denke v. Shoemaker, 2008 MT 418, 347 M 322, 198 P3d 284 (2008).

Sufficient Evidence of Employer's Creation of Hostile Work Environment and Failure to Discipline Offending Supervisor Following Incident of Sexual Harassment: The hearings examiner found that an employee was sexually harassed following an office Christmas party, that the employer failed to discipline the offending employee, and that the employer then created a hostile work environment and sought to find fault with the victim's work in order to fire her and avoid a sexual discrimination suit. Although evidence also existed to support the employer's contrary assertions, under the totality of the circumstances, the hearings examiner's conclusion that the work environment was hostile and abusive was properly upheld by the District Court, and the Supreme Court declined to disturb the agency's findings. Benjamin v. Anderson, 2005 MT 123, 327 M 173, 112 P3d 1039 (2005).

Single Incident of Sexual Assault — Work Environment That Is Not Subjectively Objectionable Not Considered Type of Hostile Environment to Be Actionable Under Title VII — Standard of Review: Following a single incident of sexual assault by a coworker, Beaver brought a claim against the Department of Natural Resources and Conservation (DNRC) under the Montana governmental code of fair practices; Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964; and this chapter, commonly known as the Montana Human Rights Act, asserting that the incident was sufficiently severe or pervasive to alter employment conditions and to create a hostile and abusive working environment. Under Harris v. Forklift Sys., Inc., 510 US 17 (1993), to be sufficiently severe or pervasive to violate Title VII and establish a claim, the misconduct must create a working environment that is both objectively and subjectively offensive and that a reasonable person and the victim perceive as hostile and abusive. The correct legal standard for determining whether an environment is hostile or abusive under Title VII is to review the totality of the circumstances, including: (1) the frequency of the discriminatory conduct; (2) the severity of the conduct, whether it is physically threatening or humiliating or a mere offensive utterance; and (3) whether the conduct interferes with an employee's work performance. Psychological well-being is one factor among many in the determination. Here, the coworker was dismissed following the incident, and Beaver continued working for DNRC, testifying that conditions of employment did not change following the assault. Thus, the District Court correctly concluded that the work environment was not subjectively objectionable to Beaver and that the single incident of sexual assault did not create the type of hostile or abusive environment actionable under Title VII. Beaver v. Dept. of Natural Resources and Conservation, 2003 MT 287, 318 M 35, 78 P3d 857 (2003).

Attempt to Raise New Theory Five Days Before Trial Prejudicial: Allison brought a claim against the town of Clyde Park, alleging disability, sex, and age discrimination in employment. Five days before trial, Allison attempted to raise a new theory based on alleged violation of the governmental code of fair practices. The town moved to prohibit introduction of the new theory at trial, arguing that prejudice would result because of the lack of notice and the inability to prepare a defense. The District Court agreed and granted the town's motion to preclude introduction of the new theory. On appeal, Allison contended that the court erred in prohibiting raising of the new theory because the legal obligations in the governmental code of fair practices were not presented as a separate claim, but rather were intended as evidence of the discrimination claims. However, characterizing the newly alleged violations as evidence did not alter the fact that Allison attempted to introduce a new theory 5 days before trial. The court correctly found that the alleged violations were two distinct causes of action and that allowing introduction of the new cause of action so soon before trial would prejudice the town. Allison v. Clyde Park, 2000 MT 267, 302 M 55, 11 P3d 544, 57 St. Rep. 1119 (2000).

Evidence of Sex Discrimination Warranting Submission to Jury — Directed Verdict Improper: Allison brought a claim against the town of Clyde Park, alleging disability, sex, and age discrimination in employment. At the close of Allison's case in chief, the court granted the town's motion for a directed verdict on the sex discrimination claim, but declined a similar motion on the age discrimination claim. The court allowed submission of both the age discrimination and disability claims to the jury, which returned a verdict against Allison on both claims. On appeal, Allison argued that the jury should also have been allowed to decide the sex discrimination claim. Motions for directed verdict are properly granted only when there is a complete absence of evidence to warrant submission to the jury when the evidence is considered in the light most favorable to the party opposing the motion. Here, Allison produced evidence, although minimal, in support of the sex discrimination claim, so the directed verdict on that issue was incorrectly granted. The case was remanded for trial on the sex discrimination claim. Allison v. Clyde Park, 2000 MT 267, 302 M 55, 11 P3d 544, 57 St. Rep. 1119 (2000), followed in DiMarzio v. Crazy Mtn. Constr., Inc., 2010 MT 231, 358 Mont. 119, 243 P.3d 718.

Sexual Harassment as Sexual Discrimination: Current authority supports the conclusion that by definition sexual harassment constitutes sexual discrimination. Therefore, a claim of sexual harassment in employment falls under the exclusive remedy provisions of this chapter, often referred to as the Montana Human Rights Act. Harrison v. Chance, 244 M 215, 797 P2d 200, 47 St. Rep. 1539 (1990), followed in Shields v. Helena School District No. 1, 284 M 138, 943 P2d 999, 54 St. Rep. 815 (1997).

Right to Jury Trial — Equity Claim and Claim for Damages Tried in Single Proceeding: The District Court granted plaintiffs' motion for a new nonjury trial, ruling that an action under Title 49, ch. 2, is equitable in nature and implies no right to a trial by jury in a federal suit under Title VII of the federal Civil Rights Act of 1964 (Act). Plaintiffs contended that the only damages sought were backpay and reinstatement. The Supreme Court found that the record disclosed that plaintiffs submitted evidence of damages other than backpay and reinstatement and concluded that a claim for relief under the Act and a legal claim for damages as a result of unlawful discharge were tried in a single proceeding, each claim arising out of common fact issues. The court held that the right to a jury trial encompassed both the claims under the Act and the legal claims for damages, and that the trial judge was bound by the jury's determination of facts on all issues. The Supreme Court further held that the District Court erred in granting a new nonjury trial, and the case was remanded with instructions to reinstate the jury verdict and enter judgment accordingly. Breese v. Steele Mtn. Enterprises, Inc., 220 M 454, 716 P2d 214, 43 St. Rep. 522 (1986).

General Provisions

49-2-101. Definitions.

Compiler's Comments

2011 Amendment: Chapter 201 in definition of employee inserted (b) exempting independent contractor; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective April 15, 2011.

2003 Amendment: Chapter 243 in definition of public accommodation in (a) substituted "barbering, cosmetology, electrology, esthetics, or manicuring salon or shop" for "barbershop, beauty parlor". Amendment effective October 1, 2003.

Severability: Section 25, Ch. 243, L. 2003, was a severability clause.

1997 Amendment: Chapter 467 inserted definitions of aggrieved party, Commissioner, Department, and organization; in definition of person, near end, inserted "organizations"; deleted definition of staff or Commission staff that read: ""Staff" or "commission staff" means the staff of the commission for human rights"; adjusted subsection references; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective July 1, 1997.

Applicability — Saving Clause: Section 20, Ch. 467, L. 1997, provided: "[This act] does not affect any administrative or judicial proceeding pending or commenced prior to [the effective date of this act] [effective July 1, 1997]. [This act] applies to complaints or proceedings filed on or after [the effective date of this act]."

1993 Amendments: Chapter 235 in definition of employer, after "persons", inserted "or an agent of the employer"; and made minor changes in style.

Chapter 407 substituted physical or mental disability for physical or mental handicap as defined term and in two places in (b) substituted "disability" for "handicap"; and made minor changes in style.

Preamble: The preamble attached to Ch. 235, L. 1993, provided: "WHEREAS, the employment discrimination provision of Montana law, commonly called the Montana Human Rights Act, Title 49, chapter 2, MCA, prohibits discriminatory acts by an employer; and

WHEREAS, the Montana Human Rights Act does not include an agent of an employer in the definition of employer; and

WHEREAS, certain discriminatory employment acts, including sexual harassment, may be committed by an agent of the employer, such as a supervisor; and

WHEREAS, under the present Montana Human Rights Act, a complainant has no remedy against an agent of an employer; and

WHEREAS, the federal counterpart of the employment discrimination provision of the Montana Human Rights Act, Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, 42 U.S.C. 2000e(b), does make the agent of an employer responsible for discriminatory acts committed by that agent.

THEREFORE, it is appropriate for the Legislature to amend the Montana Human Rights Act to make an agent of an employer responsible for discriminatory acts committed by that agent."

1991 Amendment: In definition of financial institution inserted "credit union"; deleted former definition of mental handicap that read: ""Mental handicap" means any mental disability resulting in subaverage intellectual functioning or impaired social competence"; substituted present definition of physical or mental handicap for former definition of physical handicap that read: ""Physical handicap" means a physical disability, infirmity, malformation, or disfigurement which is caused by bodily injury, birth defect, or illness, including epilepsy. It includes without limitation any degree of paralysis; amputation; lack of physical coordination; blindness or visual impediment; deafness or hearing impediment; muteness or speech impediment; or physical reliance on a guide dog for the blind, a wheelchair, or any other remedial appliance or device"; and made minor changes in style.

Preamble: The preamble attached to Ch. 241, L. 1991, provided: "WHEREAS, the Legislature has previously included physical and mental handicaps as subjects of discrimination law in the Montana Human Rights Act and the Montana Governmental Code of Fair Practices; and

WHEREAS, the definitions previously adopted lack clarity and are inconsistent with definitions used in federal civil rights statutes and court interpretations on the subject; and

WHEREAS, federal handicap discrimination law requires reasonable accommodation for mental and physical handicaps.

THEREFORE, it is appropriate for the Legislature to redefine the terms "mental handicap" and "physical handicap" and to include the requirement of reasonable accommodation."

1989 Amendment: In definition of public accommodation inserted (b) stating the definition does not include certain distinctly private places. Amendment effective April 14, 1989.

Severability: Section 5, Ch. 543, L. 1989, was a severability clause.

No Discrimination on Basis of Disability When Employee Is Not Substantially Limited and Employer Does Not Regard Individual as Restricted: The plaintiff employee filed a Human Rights Act claim against the defendant employer, claiming discrimination because of a disability. The Supreme Court concluded that the District Court properly affirmed the hearings officer's determination that: (1) the employer did not discriminate on the basis of a disability against the employee because the employee was not substantially limited, within the meaning of 49-2-101(19), in his ability to work in a class of jobs generally; (2) the employer did not regard the employee as restricted in his ability to perform the basic functions of his own job; and (3) the employee resigned of his own accord and was not discharged. Welch v. Holcim, 2014 MT 1, 373 Mont. 181, 316 P.3d 823.

Attorney With Potential Clients With Disabilities Not Aggrieved Party — No Standing to Assert Public Accommodations Discrimination Claim: The respondent, an attorney who rented office space in a building managed by the petitioner, brought a public accommodations discrimination claim against the petitioner, arguing that the petitioner had blocked public access to the only elevator in the building, making the respondent's second-floor law office inaccessible for clients with disabilities. The Supreme Court dismissed the respondent's claim, holding that he lacked standing to bring the claim. The court held that the respondent's intention to open a discrimination law practice for unknown potential clients was not a specific personal and legal interest sufficient to qualify him as an aggrieved person under the Montana Human Rights Act (MHRA). While the MHRA prohibits discrimination in public accommodations, a plaintiff is generally limited to asserting his own legal rights and interests; in this case, the respondent's claim was based on his potential future clients' access to his office, rather than his own access, and was therefore insufficient to establish standing. Baxter Homeowners Ass'n, Inc. v. Angel, 2013 MT 83, 369 Mont. 398, 298 P.3d 1145, following Williamson v. Mont. Pub. Serv. Comm'n, 2012 MT 32, 364 Mont. 128, 272 P.3d 71.

Obesity Absent Physiological Disorder Constituting Physical or Mental Impairment: On a certified question from the U.S. District Court, the Montana Supreme Court held that obesity that is not a symptom of a physiological disorder or condition may constitute a physical or mental impairment as used in the definition of "physical or mental disability" if the individual's weight is outside "normal range" and affects "one or more body systems" as defined in 29 CFR 1630.2(h)(1). In construing "impairment" for the first time, the court looked to the federal Equal Employment Opportunity Commission's Interpretive Guidance, which states that impairment does not include physical characteristics that are within normal range and are not the result of a physiological disorder. The court concluded that a finding of impairment requires a physiological disorder only if a person's physical characteristic is within normal range. BNSF Ry. Co. v. Feit, 2012 MT 147, 365 Mont. 359, 281 P.3d 225.

Use of Contemporaneous Federal Interpretation by Court Appropriate: On a certified question from the U.S. District Court, the Montana Supreme Court held that obesity that is not a symptom of a physiological disorder or condition may constitute a physical or mental impairment as used in the definition of "physical or mental disability" if the individual's weight is outside "normal range" and affects "one or more body systems" as defined in federal regulation. The court relied on the Americans with Disabilities Act (ADA), the ADA Amendments Act of 2008, the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission's 2011 Interpretive Guidance, and contemporaneous federal interpretations to satisfy the Legislature's directive that Montana law be interpreted consistently with federal discrimination laws. BNSF Ry. Co. v. Feit, 2012 MT 147, 365 Mont. 359, 281 P.3d 225.

Reasonable Accommodation of Disabled Employee's Service Dog — Employer's Duties to Provide Reasonable Accommodation — Employee's Requested Accommodation Within Scope of Human Rights Act: McDonald was employed by the Department of Environmental Quality (DEQ) as a fiscal officer. As a disabled person, McDonald required the use of a service dog. However, the dog continually slipped on the floors of the DEQ building where McDonald worked, and despite McDonald's repeated requests for DEQ to install nonslip surfaces for the dog, the requested accommodation was still not made 1 ½ years after McDonald's request. McDonald eventually left DEQ and had to retire the dog, which allegedly caused numerous work-related and social problems for McDonald. McDonald then sued DEQ for employment discrimination. The hearings examiner concluded that there was no rational basis for the delay and that McDonald was discriminated against; the examiner imposed injunctive relief and awarded McDonald damages of $10,000 for emotional distress, $18,000 for a replacement service animal, $1,536 for travel expenses to procure the animal, and $333.84 for veterinary expenses. The Human Rights Commission affirmed the agency decision, but the District Court reversed. The court concluded that DEQ met its legal duty to provide a reasonable accommodation by allowing McDonald to use the service dog in the workplace but held that DEQ had no legal duty to provide an accommodation for the service animal. McDonald appealed and the Supreme Court reversed. The court held that the reasonable accommodation requirement is best understood as a means by which barriers to equal employment of disabled persons are removed or alleviated, so if an adjustment or modification is job-related and specifically assists the person in performing the duties of a particular job, it will be considered a type of reasonable accommodation. Employers are not relieved of the duty to accommodate when an employee is already able to perform the essential functions of a job. Rather, an employer is fundamentally obligated to not interfere, either through action or inaction, with a disabled employee's efforts to pursue a normal life. Further, an employer's duty to make reasonable accommodations does not end with allowing an assistive device through the front door. The duty also requires an employer to address any barriers to the employee's ability to actually use the device effectively in the workplace, which includes modification of a floor surface if such an accommodation is otherwise reasonable. In this case, substantial evidence supported the hearings examiner's ultimate finding that McDonald needed an accommodation, and the District Court erred in holding that McDonald's requested accommodation for the service dog was beyond the scope of the DEQ's duty under the Montana Human Rights Act. McDonald v. Dept. of Environmental Quality, 2009 MT 209, 351 M 243, 214 P3d 749 (2009), following Buckingham v. U.S., 998 F2d 735 (9th Cir. 1993).

Sufficient Evidence of Employer's Creation of Hostile Work Environment and Failure to Discipline Offending Supervisor Following Incident of Sexual Harassment: The hearings examiner found that an employee was sexually harassed following an office Christmas party, that the employer failed to discipline the offending employee, and that the employer then created a hostile work environment and sought to find fault with the victim's work in order to fire her and avoid a sexual discrimination suit. Although evidence also existed to support the employer's contrary assertions, under the totality of the circumstances, the hearings examiner's conclusion that the work environment was hostile and abusive was properly upheld by the District Court, and the Supreme Court declined to disturb the agency's findings. Benjamin v. Anderson, 2005 MT 123, 327 M 173, 112 P3d 1039 (2005).

Indefinite Leave of Absence Not Considered Reasonable Accommodation — Standard for Ascertaining Whether Person Qualified Individual Deserving of Reasonable Accommodation: After Pannoni was terminated from his teaching job for excessive absences, Pannoni filed a discrimination complaint alleging that he had been terminated because of a mental disability and that the school district failed to accommodate his disability by granting continued unpaid leaves of absence. The Department of Labor and Industry concluded that Pannoni was not able to perform essential job functions and therefore was not a qualified person for the teaching position. The Commission for Human Rights and the District Court agreed, and on appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. Although an employer has a duty to provide a reasonable accommodation to a person with a disability if the accommodation allows the person to perform essential job functions, an employer is not required to accommodate an employee who suffers from a prolonged illness by allowing the employee an indefinite leave of absence, nor is an employer required to grant a second leave if the employee's condition recurs after return from the first leave. The requirement to grant a leave of absence cannot be repeatedly invoked to permit an unqualified employee to avoid termination by requesting leave each time that the employee is about to be fired. Although Pannoni suggested a lenient plausibility standard for determining whether an accommodation is reasonable, the Supreme Court applied the standard already in Montana administrative law that a person with a disability is qualified to hold an employment position if the person can perform the essential functions of the job with or without a reasonable accommodation for the disability. Pannoni could not show that he was a qualified individual capable of performing essential teaching functions even with a reasonable accommodation, so the discrimination claim failed. Pannoni v. Browning School District No. 9 Bd. of Trustees, 2004 MT 130, 321 M 311, 90 P3d 438 (2004), following Kimbro v. Atl. Richfield Co., 889 F2d 869 (9th Cir. 1989), Nowak v. St. Rita High School, 142 F3d 999 (7th Cir. 1998), and Humphrey v. Mem. Hosp. Ass'n, 239 F3d 1128 (9th Cir. 2001).

Temporary, Nonchronic Condition Not Considered Disability — Human Rights Act Claim Properly Dismissed: Adamson injured his shoulder off the job and was allowed to return to work with lifting restrictions, but the County Commission denied reinstatement to his former job. Adamson returned to work after 6 months with no restrictions, underwent surgery 3 months later, and was released to work 1 month later with restrictions, but again the County Commission denied his request to return to work until he had no restrictions. Adamson ultimately returned to work with a full release and worked until retirement, but subsequently filed a complaint with the Commission for Human Rights, claiming financial loss because of discrimination by the County Commission for his temporary disabilities. A hearings examiner and the Commission held for the county, and the District Court affirmed the decision after finding that Adamson was not disabled pursuant to Title 49, ch. 2, commonly known as the Montana Human Rights Act. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. Noting that the determination of a disability is made on a case-by-case basis, the Supreme Court held that Adamson's temporary, nonchronic impairment of short duration, with little or no long-term permanent impact, was not a disability as defined in 49-2-303. Other similar impairments not considered to be disabilities may include but are not limited to broken hips, sprained joints, concussions, appendicitis, and influenza (see the interpretive guidelines in 29 CFR 1630.2(j)). Adamson v. Pondera County, 2004 MT 27, 319 M 378, 84 P3d 1048 (2004), distinguishing Martinell v. Mont. Power Co., 268 M 292, 886 P2d 421 (1994), and Butterfield v. Sidney Pub. Schools, 2001 MT 177, 306 M 179, 32 P3d 1243 (2001).

Single Incident of Sexual Assault — Work Environment That Is Not Subjectively Objectionable Not Considered Type of Hostile Environment to Be Actionable Under Title VII — Standard of Review: Following a single incident of sexual assault by a coworker, Beaver brought a claim against the Department of Natural Resources and Conservation (DNRC) under the Montana governmental code of fair practices; Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964; and this chapter, commonly known as the Montana Human Rights Act, asserting that the incident was sufficiently severe or pervasive to alter employment conditions and to create a hostile and abusive working environment. Under Harris v. Forklift Sys., Inc., 510 US 17 (1993), to be sufficiently severe or pervasive to violate Title VII and establish a claim, the misconduct must create a working environment that is both objectively and subjectively offensive and that a reasonable person and the victim perceive as hostile and abusive. The correct legal standard for determining whether an environment is hostile or abusive under Title VII is to review the totality of the circumstances, including: (1) the frequency of the discriminatory conduct; (2) the severity of the conduct, whether it is physically threatening or humiliating or a mere offensive utterance; and (3) whether the conduct interferes with an employee's work performance. Psychological well-being is one factor among many in the determination. Here, the coworker was dismissed following the incident, and Beaver continued working for DNRC, testifying that conditions of employment did not change following the assault. Thus, the District Court correctly concluded that the work environment was not subjectively objectionable to Beaver and that the single incident of sexual assault did not create the type of hostile or abusive environment actionable under Title VII. Beaver v. Dept. of Natural Resources and Conservation, 2003 MT 287, 318 M 35, 78 P3d 857 (2003).

No Record or Evidence of Mental Impairment Rising to Level of Disability — Particular Job but Not Broad Range of Jobs Precluded: Walker contended that his employer, Montana Power Company (MPC), knew that he suffered from a mental impairment brought about by work-related stress and that he had a documented record of impairment and was regarded as having an impairment. Citing Holihan v. Lucky Stores, Inc., 87 F3d 362 (9th Cir. 1996), the Supreme Court held that depression and anxiety do not render a person disabled within the meaning of 29 CFR 1630.2(j)(3)(i) of the federal Americans With Disabilities Act of 1990 when the depression and anxiety do not prevent that person from working at a broad range of jobs, but only at a particular job. Walker's record of depression and stress was limited at best, and both of his supervisors testified that they did not believe that he had a record of, nor did they perceive that he had, a mental disability. MPC did not treat Walker as if he were limited in all fields of employment, only in the job of lineman supervisor. Thus, the jury could properly have determined that the credible evidence weighed in favor of a finding that Walker did not have a mental impairment that rose to the level of a disability and that he did not have a record of an impairment. Walker v. Mont. Power Co., 278 M 344, 924 P2d 1339, 53 St. Rep. 943 (1996).

"Employee" Included in Definition of Employer: In amending the definition of employer, the 1993 Legislature included an "agent of the employer". The ordinary meaning of agent includes employees who are subject to an employer's control while performing their job duties. The purpose of the amendment was to allow the Commission to redress situations in which an employee is sexually harassed by another employee. As a result, this chapter, commonly known as the Montana Human Rights Act, provides the exclusive remedy for claims based on sexual harassment committed by one employee against another, rather than being limited to direct acts by an employer. Fandrich v. Capital Ford Lincoln Mercury, 272 M 425, 901 P2d 112, 52 St. Rep. 806 (1995).

Definition of "Otherwise Qualified" for Employment: Under the first stage of the three-stage test for employment discrimination articulated in McDonnell Douglas Corp. v. Green, 411 US 792, 36 L Ed 2d 668, 93 S Ct 1817 (1973), a job applicant must establish four elements in order to make a prima facie case of discrimination, showing: (1) the person is a member of the class protected by the statute; (2) the person applied for and was qualified for the position; (3) the person was rejected despite being qualified for the job; and (4) the position remained open and the employer continued to accept applications from persons with comparable qualifications. In the case at hand, the District Court determined that Hafner failed to establish the second element of the prima facie case. The Supreme Court relied on Chandler v. Dallas, 2 F3d 1385 (5th Cir. 1993), in defining an "otherwise qualified" person as one who is able to meet all of a program's requirements in spite of a handicap. Hafner's initial qualifications for the position were demonstrated by the employer's offer of probationary employment and by the fact that Hafner had done similar work and understood and felt capable of performing the required activities. The District Court erred in determining that Hafner had failed to establish the second element of a prima facie case. Hafner v. Conoco, Inc., 268 M 396, 886 P2d 947, 51 St. Rep. 1391 (1994). On remand, the District Court erred in finding that Hafner's disability precluded him from performance of the position of helper when the question had been previously resolved in Hafner I, ibid., which became the law of the case. The District Court had no jurisdiction to revisit the issue.

Definition of "Regarded as Having an Impairment": Under the first stage of the three-stage test for employment discrimination articulated in McDonnell Douglas Corp. v. Green, 411 US

792, 36 L Ed 2d 668, 93 S Ct 1817 (1973), a job applicant must establish four elements in order to make a prima facie case of discrimination, showing: (1) the person is a member of the class protected by the statute; (2) the person applied for and was qualified for the position; (3) the person was rejected despite being qualified for the job; and (4) the position remained open and the employer continued to accept applications from persons with comparable qualifications. In the case at hand, the District Court determined that Hafner failed to establish the first element of the prima facie case. By definition in this section, physical or mental disability means a physical or mental impairment that substantially limits one or more of a person's major life activities, a record of such an impairment, or a condition "regarded as" such an impairment. In interpreting the "regarded as" provision of the definition, the Supreme Court cited Forrisi v. Bowen, 794 F2d 931 (4th Cir. 1986), in finding that an employer regards an employee as handicapped in the ability to work by finding the employee's impairment to foreclose generally the type of employment involved. Because Hafner established as a matter of law that he was "regarded" by the employer as physically disabled, the District Court erred in determining that Hafner had failed to establish the first element of a prima facie case. Hafner v. Conoco, Inc., 268 M 396, 886 P2d 947, 51 St. Rep. 1391 (1994), followed in Butterfield v. Sidney Pub. Schools, 2001 MT 177, 306 M 179, 32 P3d 1243 (2001).

Trial Court Finding That Endometriosis Constituted Handicap Upheld: Martinell was diagnosed with endometriosis and opted to be treated with drugs rather than have a hysterectomy because she wanted to have children. Treatment with the drugs caused Martinell to suffer depression that would have been lessened by straight day shifts, which Montana Power refused to let her work because she worked in a unit on swing shifts. Montana Power argued that Martinell's condition did not constitute a physical handicap as defined by the 1983 statute. The Supreme Court held that the lower court had correctly given deference to rulings and findings by the Montana Human Rights Commission and had correctly relied upon an Illinois decision in reaching the conclusion that Martinell's condition was an infirmity constituting a handicap that limited one or more of her major life activities, which included the ability to be employed. The Supreme Court further held that the lower court had correctly stated that whether or not a disease such as endometriosis constituted a handicap had to be determined on a case-by-case basis. Martinell v. Mont. Power Co., 268 M 292, 886 P2d 421, 51 St. Rep. 1329 (1994).

Compiler's Comments

2011 Amendment: Chapter 205 in (1) at beginning substituted "The department may issue subpoenas" for "The commission may subpoena witnesses" and at end substituted "complaint of discrimination filed under this chapter" for "matter in question before the commission"; in (2) at end substituted "production of books, papers, or other tangible evidence for examination relating to the matter under investigation" for "production, for examination, of books, papers, or other intangible evidence"; deleted former (3) that read: "(3) A party may request subpoenas from the commissioner for the purposes provided in subsection (2)"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective April 18, 2011.

1997 Amendment: Chapter 467 in (1), near end after "matter", deleted "either under investigation by the commission staff or" and deleted second sentence that read: "The commission may delegate the foregoing powers to a person within the staff for the purpose of investigating a complaint"; inserted (2) concerning staff-requested subpoenas; inserted (3) concerning party-requested subpoenas; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective July 1, 1997.

Applicability — Saving Clause: Section 20, Ch. 467, L. 1997, provided: "[This act] does not affect any administrative or judicial proceeding pending or commenced prior to [the effective date of this act] [effective July 1, 1997]. [This act] applies to complaints or proceedings filed on or after [the effective date of this act]."

Case Notes

Investigation of Human Rights Violations — Personnel Files: The Human Rights Commission (HRC) requested access to personnel files in connection with its investigation of a discrimination complaint. The court found that information sought by the HRC is protected by the right of privacy. The court also found that a sufficient showing of compelling state interest was made under Art. II, sec. 4, Mont. Const., and Title 49, ch. 2, allowing the HRC access to the information. To protect the privacy of the individuals whose files are disclosed, the court directed that the HRC may not disclose the information unless it is altered so as to provide for the anonymity of the persons involved. If the information must be released in such a way as to disclose the identity of the persons involved, HRC must, prior to the release, obtain an order from the District Court authorizing the release. Commission for Human Rights Discretion to Award Compensatory Damages in Mixed Motives Cases: Laudert suffered liver failure while employed by the Richland County Sheriff's Department (RCSD) and had to resign. Following Laudert's full recovery, his former position came open again and he applied but was not rehired. He filed a discrimination charge on grounds of age and disability. The hearings examiner found that questions asked by the RCSD interview panel constituted direct evidence that RCSD had unlawfully considered Laudert's disability, but did not award damages because Laudert would not have been hired even in the absence of any unlawful consideration of his disability. RCSD maintained that Laudert was not hired because of his employment history. The hearings examiner properly determined that this was a "mixed motive" case. Whether Laudert was entitled to compensatory damages depended on whether RCSD proved by a preponderance of the evidence that it would have made the same decision in the absence of Laudert's disability, and Laudert's employment history provided substantial evidence proving that Laudert would not have been hired in any event. The Supreme Court found that the hearings examiner properly exercised the statutory discretion to preclude damages, and the court affirmed the authority of the Commission for Human Rights to limit compensatory damages in mixed motive cases pursuant to ARM 24.9.611 and Price Waterhouse

v. Hopkins, 490 US 228 (1989). Laudert v. Richland County Sheriff's Dept., 2000 MT 218, 301 M 114, 7 P3d 386, 57 St. Rep. 872 (2000).

Date of Requested Rehearing — Running of Judicial Review Period: The 30-day period under 2-4-702 began to run when the Human Rights Commission issued its final order, not when the Commission denied a requested rehearing, since the Commission has no rule allowing a rehearing. Substantial Evidence Supporting Hearings Examiner's Finding of Sexual Discrimination — Commission for Human Rights Reversal of Hearings Examiner's Findings Reversed: Schmidt was hired as a live-in maid at a motel but was told by the manager that as part of the job, she would be required to have sex with him and with motel customers. Schmidt filed a human rights complaint against the motel manager and the owner, alleging that the manager and the motel discriminated against her on the basis of sex in employment by subjecting her to sexual harassment. A hearings examiner determined that the manager illegally discriminated against Schmidt by subjecting her to quid pro quo sexual harassment as a condition of employment as a maid and that the owner was jointly and severally liable for failing to provide a sexual harassment policy. The owner appealed the final agency decision to the Commission for Human Rights, which reversed the agency decision and dismissed Schmidt's complaint. The District Court affirmed the Commission decision, and Schmidt appealed. The Supreme Court found that although there may have been evidence in the record that supported contrary findings, substantial credible evidence supported the hearings examiner's findings. Thus, the Commission for Human Rights erred in reversing the hearings examiner, and the District Court erred in affirming the Commission. The case was reversed and remanded for further proceedings. Part 3
Prohibited Discriminatory Practices

Part Case Notes

Sufficient Evidence of Employer's Creation of Hostile Work Environment and Failure to Discipline Offending Supervisor Following Incident of Sexual Harassment: The hearings examiner found that an employee was sexually harassed following an office Christmas party, that the employer failed to discipline the offending employee, and that the employer then created a hostile work environment and sought to find fault with the victim's work in order to fire her and avoid a sexual discrimination suit. Although evidence also existed to support the employer's contrary assertions, under the totality of the circumstances, the hearings examiner's conclusion that the work environment was hostile and abusive was properly upheld by the District Court, and the Supreme Court declined to disturb the agency's findings. Benjamin v. Anderson, 2005 MT 123, 327 M 173, 112 P3d 1039 (2005).

Assignment of Particular Work Position Not Considered Marital or Sex-Plus Discrimination: Three temporary seasonal positions at the Department of Natural Resources and Conservation (DNRC) were eliminated, including Beaver's position, and three permanent seasonal positions were created, including two 8-month positions and one 6-month position. Beaver was given the 6-month position and later sued DNRC for marital and sex-plus discrimination, based in part on the comment by a supervisor that Beaver did not have to worry about getting the 6-month position because she had recently been married and now had a new husband to support her.

DNRC contended that the positions were offered based on experience and training, and it was within the discretion of the District Court to determine the credibility of the witnesses and testimony. Although agreeing that the supervisor's statement was highly inappropriate, the Supreme Court nevertheless held that based on the evidence, the employment decision did not involve marital or sex-plus discrimination and that DNRC did not discriminate against Beaver based on marital status. Beaver v. Dept. of Natural Resources and Conservation, 2003 MT 287, 318 M 35, 78 P3d 857 (2003).

Failure to Establish Prima Facie Case of Employment Discrimination Based on Alleged Retaliation: Three temporary seasonal positions at the Department of Natural Resources and Conservation (DNRC) were eliminated, including Beaver's position, and three permanent seasonal positions were created, including two 8-month positions and one 6-month position. Beaver was given the 6-month position and later sued DNRC for retaliation for Beaver's earlier filing of an employment discrimination complaint against DNRC. Under Wrighten v. Metropolitan Hosp., Inc., 726 F2d 1346 (9th Cir. 1984), a plaintiff bringing an action for retaliation under Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 must first establish a prima facie case by showing that: (1) plaintiff engaged in a protected activity; (2) plaintiff was thereafter subjected to adverse employment action by the employer; and (3) there was a causal link between the two. The District Court correctly concluded that the second and third elements were not satisfied. Although the 6-month position was the less favorable of the three, it was still better than the temporary seasonable position that Beaver had before and thus could not be considered an adverse employment action. Further, credible evidence indicated that the positions were assigned based on experience and training rather than on retaliation for Beaver's filing a complaint. Beaver v. Dept. of Natural Resources and Conservation, 2003 MT 287, 318 M 35, 78 P3d 857 (2003).

Single Incident of Sexual Assault — Work Environment That Is Not Subjectively Objectionable Not Considered Type of Hostile Environment to Be Actionable Under Title VII — Standard of Review: Following a single incident of sexual assault by a coworker, Beaver brought a claim against the Department of Natural Resources and Conservation (DNRC) under the Montana governmental code of fair practices; Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964; and this chapter, commonly known as the Montana Human Rights Act, asserting that the incident was sufficiently severe or pervasive to alter employment conditions and to create a hostile and abusive working environment. Under Harris v. Forklift Sys., Inc., 510 US 17 (1993), to be sufficiently severe or pervasive to violate Title VII and establish a claim, the misconduct must create a working environment that is both objectively and subjectively offensive and that a reasonable person and the victim perceive as hostile and abusive. The correct legal standard for determining whether an environment is hostile or abusive under Title VII is to review the totality of the circumstances, including: (1) the frequency of the discriminatory conduct; (2) the severity of the conduct, whether it is physically threatening or humiliating or a mere offensive utterance; and (3) whether the conduct interferes with an employee's work performance. Psychological well-being is one factor among many in the determination. Here, the coworker was dismissed following the incident, and Beaver continued working for DNRC, testifying that conditions of employment did not change following the assault. Thus, the District Court correctly concluded that the work environment was not subjectively objectionable to Beaver and that the single incident of sexual assault did not create the type of hostile or abusive environment actionable under Title VII. Beaver v. Dept. of Natural Resources and Conservation, 2003 MT 287, 318 M 35, 78 P3d 857 (2003).

Sexual Harassment as Sexual Discrimination: Current authority supports the conclusion that by definition sexual harassment constitutes sexual discrimination. Therefore, a claim of sexual harassment in employment falls under the exclusive remedy provisions of this chapter, often referred to as the Montana Human Rights Act. Harrison v. Chance, 244 M 215, 797 P2d 200, 47 St. Rep. 1539 (1990), followed in Shields v. Helena School District No. 1, 284 M 138, 943 P2d 999, 54 St. Rep. 815 (1997).

Montana Maternity Leave Act — Not Preempted by Federal Law: Female employee who was discharged from her employment because of her pregnancy sought back wages and penalties. Employer claimed its no-leave policy for employees with less than 1 year with the company was facially neutral because it applied to both sexes and sought a judicial determination that the Montana Maternity Leave Act (MMLA) is invalid because it is preempted by Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 and the federal Pregnancy Discrimination Act (PDA). The District Court held the MMLA invalid. The Supreme Court reversed the District Court decision and held that the employer's no-leave policy clearly violated the Montana law and that the employee was entitled to backpay and penalties for her wrongful discharge. The Supreme Court stated that the employer's no-leave policy created a disparate effect on women who become pregnant compared to men who do not become pregnant. Although the policy was facially neutral, it nonetheless subjected pregnant women to job termination on a basis not faced by men. The no-leave policy therefore appears to be gender-based discrimination by an employer in violation of Title VII and the PDA. The Supreme Court stated that the MMLA is consonant with Title VII and the PDA and is not preempted by either. Miller-Wohl Co., Inc. v. Comm'r of Labor & Industry, 214 M 238, 692 P2d 1243, 41 St. Rep. 2445 (1984); on appeal to the U.S. Supreme Court, judgment vacated and case remanded, 479 US 1048, 93 L Ed 2d 972, 107 S Ct 919 (1987); judgment reinstated and remanded to the District Court for determination of appropriate attorney fees and costs, 228 M 505, 744 P2d 871, 44 St. Rep. 1718 (1987).

Equal Protection — Discrimination in Private Trust Not Illegal Absent State Action: A trust that was created to provide stipends to male members of Future Farmers of America and 4-H clubs, although clearly discriminatory, did not violate the Equal Protection Clause of the United States Constitution. A private person may dispose of his money or property as he wishes and in so doing may lawfully discriminate without offending the Equal Protection Clause as long as the state and its instrumentalities are not involved. In re the Trust Created Under the Will of Cram, 186 M 37, 606 P2d 145, 37 St. Rep. 222 (1980).

Case Notes

No Finding of Malicious Prosecution, Abuse of Process, or Tortious Interference in Employment Discrimination Claim — Judgment as Matter of Law Proper: Lynch filed an employment discrimination claim against doctor Hughes for sexual harassment actions that Hughes took in a hospital in which Lynch was employed. The Commission for Human Rights determined that Hughes was not an employer or agent of an employer, so Hughes did not bear an employer's liability for sexual harassment. Hughes' behavior after Lynch filed the claim was determined to constitute illegal retaliation, but because Lynch did not claim retaliation, the claim was dismissed. Hughes then filed an action in District Court alleging malicious prosecution, abuse of process, and tortious interference. The court found that the claims could not be proved and granted Lynch judgment as a matter of law. Hughes appealed, but the Supreme Court examined each claim and affirmed. First, Hughes could not prove that there was a lack of probable cause for Lynch's action or that the proceeding favored Lynch, so the malicious prosecution claim failed. Second, nothing in the record showed that Lynch used abuse of process to coerce Hughes to do some collateral thing that Hughes could not be legally and regularly compelled to do, so the abuse of process claim also failed. Third, there was no evidence to suggest that Lynch's acts were calculated to damage Hughes, and Lynch was entitled to seek redress and damages for the alleged discrimination, so the tortious interference claim failed as well. Thus, the District Court correctly determined that no genuine issue of material fact existed and that Lynch was entitled to judgment as a matter of law. Hughes v. Lynch, 2007 MT 177, 338 M 214, 164 P3d 913 (2007), following Plouffe v. Co., 2008 MT 181, 343 M 416, 186 P3d 214 (2008), with regard to applicability of the probable cause standard for a malicious prosecution claim.

Failure to Establish Prima Facie Case of Employment Discrimination Based on Alleged Retaliation: Three temporary seasonal positions at the Department of Natural Resources and Conservation (DNRC) were eliminated, including Beaver's position, and three permanent seasonal positions were created, including two 8-month positions and one 6-month position. Beaver was given the 6-month position and later sued DNRC for retaliation for Beaver's earlier filing of an employment discrimination complaint against DNRC. Under Wrighten v. Metropolitan Hosp., Inc., 726 F2d 1346 (9th Cir. 1984), a plaintiff bringing an action for retaliation under Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 must first establish a prima facie case by showing that: (1) plaintiff engaged in a protected activity; (2) plaintiff was thereafter subjected to adverse employment action by the employer; and (3) there was a causal link between the two. The District Court correctly concluded that the second and third elements were not satisfied. Although the 6-month position was the less favorable of the three, it was still better than the temporary seasonable position that Beaver had before and thus could not be considered an adverse employment action. Further, credible evidence indicated that the positions were assigned based on experience and training rather than on retaliation for Beaver's filing a complaint. Beaver v. Dept. of Natural Resources and Conservation, 2003 MT 287, 318 M 35, 78 P3d 857 (2003).

Employment Contingent on Adherence to Teachings of Roman Catholic Church — Discrimination Statutes Inapplicable: Until her termination in 1993, Parker-Bigback was employed by St. Labre School, which is operated by the St. Labre Indian School Education Association, an institution based on the teachings and beliefs of the Roman Catholic Church. Parker-Bigback filed a complaint with the Montana Commission for Human Rights, alleging that she was discriminated against because her termination was based on marital status or sex discrimination. The school maintained that Parker-Bigback's position was eliminated to establish a personnel department, which Parker-Bigback contended was simply a pretext for terminating her employment based on her lifestyle of cohabiting with a man who was not her husband. However, one condition of Parker-Bigback's employment was an agreement to adhere to the moral and religious teachings and beliefs of the Roman Catholic Church and to not engage in any personal conduct or lifestyle contrary to church policies. Thus, it made no difference whether Parker-Bigback was married or single—if she cohabited with someone of the opposite sex to whom she was not married, she would be at variance with church teachings in violation of her contract. Therefore, this was not a case about marital status or gender, but rather about conduct Parker-Bigback agreed to avoid as a condition of employment. Nothing in Art. II, sec. 4, Mont. Const., or 49-2-303 prohibits discrimination based on conduct, nor was any authority offered to persuade the Supreme Court that Parker-Bigback's conduct involved a right of such high order that it would overcome the school's right to freely exercise its religion through its employment practices. Even if she was terminated for cohabitation, her rights to be free from discrimination were not involved, so her employment discrimination case was properly dismissed by summary judgment for the school. Parker-Bigback v. St. Labre School, 2000 MT 210, 301 M 16, 7 P3d 361, 57 St. Rep. 823 (2000). See also Miller v. Catholic Diocese of Great Falls, 224 M 113, 728 P2d 794 (1986).

Termination for Failure to Notify Employer of Conflict of Interest — Not Retaliation for Exercising Right to Sue: Hafner was fired for failure to inform the employer of Hafner's pending litigation against the employer's client while continuing to work on the client's account on behalf of the employer. Hafner was denied unemployment compensation benefits based on employee misconduct. The failure to inform the employer of the conflict of interest constituted willful disregard of the interests of the employer and of reasonable standards of behavior that the employer had the right to expect. Hafner was not terminated for pursuing life's basic necessities or for pursuing a discrimination claim against the client. Termination did not amount to retaliation under this section. Hafner v. Dept. of Labor and Industry, 280 M 95, 929 P2d 233, 53 St. Rep. 1315 (1996).

Proof of Retaliatory Discharge — Claim Outside Context of Collective Bargaining Agreement Not Preempted by Federal Law: To prove retaliatory discharge involving sexual harassment, it must be shown that: (1) the employee was discharged; (2) the employee was subjected to sexual harassment during the course of employment; and (3) the employer's motivation for the discharge was to retaliate for the employee's resistance to the sexual harassment. When this factual inquiry does not turn on the meaning of any term of a collective bargaining agreement, the wrongful discharge claim is considered independent of the agreement for purposes of preemption under federal law. Foster v. Albertsons, Inc., 254 M 117, 835 P2d 720, 49 St. Rep. 638 (1992), following Lingle v. Norge Div. of Magic Chef, Inc., 486 US 399, 100 L Ed 2d 410, 108 S Ct 1877 (1988), and followed, with respect to sexual discrimination, in Pike v. Burlington N. RR Co., 273 M 390, 903 P2d 1352, 52 St. Rep. 1005 (1995).

Jury Instruction on Issue of Retaliation for Participation in Discrimination Action: Acts of retaliation for participating in proceedings before the Human Rights Commission are discrimination actions separate and apart from the claim of discrimination in the original proceedings. Plaintiff is therefore entitled to jury instructions based on his claim of retaliation and is further entitled to comment on the retaliation in oral argument. Mahan v. Farmers Union Cent. Exch., Inc., 235 M 410, 768 P2d 850, 46 St. Rep. 96 (1989).

Verdict Supported by the Evidence: There was substantial evidence to support the jury's finding that the plaintiff was dismissed from her employment because she filed charges with the United States Equal Employment Opportunity Commission alleging unlawful employment practices by her employer. Strong v. St., 183 M 410, 600 P2d 191 (1979).

Offer to Transfer Guard to Different Unit Reasonable Response to Sexual Harassment by Inmate — Claims for Discrimination and Sexual Harassment Properly Dismissed: A guard at a youth correctional facility resigned after her supervisor refused to transfer to the maximum security unit at the facility an inmate who had been threatening and intimidating her. The guard then sued her former employer for sexual harassment and discrimination. The facility argued that it took corrective action calculated to end the harassment when it offered to transfer the guard to another unit, but that it could not transfer the inmate as demanded by the guard. The District Court agreed and dismissed the guard's claims. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed, agreeing that the facility's offer to transfer the guard to another unit was reasonable and not pretext. Puskas v. Pine Hills Youth Correctional Facility, 2013 MT 223, 371 Mont. 259, 307 P.3d 298.

Husband Discriminated Against Based on Marital Status: Award of back pay to the husband was an appropriate remedy when a couple was fired due to the employer's dissatisfaction with the wife's job performance. The couple was hired as a management team, and there was no dissatisfaction with the husband's performance. Mercer v. McGee, 2008 MT 374, 346 M 484, 197 P3d 961 (2008).

Sexual Discrimination in the Workplace — Claim Affirmed: Defendant employer's son managed the employer's business. Plaintiff complained to the employer regarding the employer's son's sexual conduct on the job, but rather than considering any complaints against her son, the employer rescheduled plaintiff to work a shift that conflicted with plaintiff's child care arrangements, forcing plaintiff to quit. In considering plaintiff's sexual discrimination claim, the hearings examiner found that plaintiff had been discriminated against and that the employer's response to plaintiff's complaint created a hostile work environment. The Commission for Human Rights reversed the hearings examiner's decision, and the District Court affirmed, but on appeal, the Supreme Court reversed the District Court. By failing to do anything to change her son's behavior, the employer created a workplace permeated with discriminatory intimidation that was sufficiently severe or pervasive to alter the conditions of plaintiff's employment and create an abusive working environment. The District Court's affirmation of the Commission's decision was reversible error. Stringer-Altmaier v. Haffner, 2006 MT 129, 332 M 293, 138 P3d 419 (2006).

Court Reinstatement of Emotional Damage Award Following Arbitrary Reduction by Commission for Human Rights Affirmed: After finding that plaintiff was subjected to employment discrimination, the hearings examiner concluded that plaintiff was entitled to $75,000 in compensatory damages for emotional distress. The Commission for Human Rights reduced the award to $40,000, but the Commission did not cite any evidence to support the reduction, aside from the vague feeling of some Commissioners that the initial award was too high. The District Court reinstated the $75,000 award, and on appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. The hearings examiner had authority to award compensatory damages, and the hearings examiner's findings were supported by testimony from plaintiff, plaintiff's experts, and others. The Commission's reduction was arbitrary, and the District Court did not err in reinstating the original compensatory award. Benjamin v. Anderson, 2005 MT 123, 327 M 173, 112 P3d 1039 (2005).

No Error in Dismissal of Business Partner Uninvolved in Discrimination: Plaintiff sued a business, the business owner, the business manager, and the manager's husband for discrimination in employment. The hearings examiner found that it was the conduct of the business owner and the business manager that led to plaintiff's discharge from employment and dismissed the manager's husband from the suit. The District Court affirmed the finding, and on appeal, the Supreme Court agreed. The husband's conduct and apparent authority in the business were not sufficient to render him a de facto owner or operator of the business, and his dismissal from the suit was proper. Benjamin v. Anderson, 2005 MT 123, 327 M 173, 112 P3d 1039 (2005).

No Error in Failure to Reduce Wage Loss Recovery in Human Rights Case for Failure to Mitigate: After finding that plaintiff was subjected to employment discrimination, the hearings examiner concluded that plaintiff was entitled to recover lost wages. Defendants contended that the wage loss should be reduced because plaintiff failed to take reasonable steps to mitigate the damages. The Supreme Court agreed that in a claim for lost wages before the Commission for Human Rights, a claimant must take reasonable steps toward mitigating damages. Citing Hulett v. Bozeman School District, 228 M 71, 740 P2d 1132 (1987), the court noted that plaintiff was not obligated to seek out all possible employment opportunities, but needed only to be reasonable in pursuing offers of employment. In this case, it was undisputed that plaintiff was emotionally debilitated, and although there was evidence of other reasons why plaintiff did not immediately seek new employment, plaintiff's medical testimony and testimony concerning plaintiff's loss of confidence, anxiety, and reluctance to meet new people supported the hearings examiner's findings, and the Supreme Court declined to disturb those findings. Benjamin v. Anderson, 2005 MT 123, 327 M 173, 112 P3d 1039 (2005).

Duty of Reasonable Accommodation in Existence Prior to 1991 Revision of Law — Failure to Accommodate Constituting Constructive Discharge: Martinell was diagnosed with endometriosis and opted to be treated with drugs rather than have a hysterectomy because she wanted to have children. Treatment with the drugs caused Martinell to suffer depression that would have been lessened by straight day shifts, which Montana Power refused to let her work because she worked in a unit on swing shifts. Montana Power argued that prior to the 1991 revision of discrimination laws, there was no express duty of reasonable accommodation that would have required the company to place Martinell on day shifts. The Supreme Court held that the lower court had correctly determined that the Montana Human Rights Commission's rules and case rulings, as well as federal law and case law throughout the country, demonstrated that the law as it existed prior to 1991 created an implied duty of reasonable accommodation. The Supreme Court also held that an examination of the totality of the circumstances, including the fact that accommodation could be made without undue hardship or expense or without affecting the health or safety of others, supported the lower court's finding that Martinell had been constructively discharged. Martinell v. Mont. Power Co., 268 M 292, 886 P2d 421, 51 St. Rep. 1329 (1994).

Front Pay Option to Reinstatement When Antagonism Exists: Montana Power argued that the lower court erred in granting front pay to Martinell in a discrimination suit because reinstatement was a viable option. The Supreme Court held that the record and findings of the lower court supported front pay when Martinell proved that antagonism existed between the parties, ruling out reinstatement. Martinell v. Mont. Power Co., 268 M 292, 886 P2d 421, 51 St. Rep. 1329 (1994).

No Right to Jury Trial on Discrimination Claim: It was not error to bifurcate a discrimination claim based on this chapter, commonly known as the Montana Human Rights Act, from a wrongful discharge claim and to refuse a jury trial on the former. Sullivan v. Sisters of Charity of Providence of Mont., 268 M 71, 885 P2d 488, 51 St. Rep. 1193 (1994).

Respondeat Superior Liability of Bar Owner: A bar owner was liable, under respondeat superior, for discriminatory acts of her employee. Vainio v. Brookshire, 258 M 273, 852 P2d 596, 50 St. Rep. 529 (1993).

Payment of Fee in Lieu of Union Dues by Catholic Objecting to Union Stand on Abortion and Birth Control: A Roman Catholic teacher who opposed birth control and abortion on religious grounds objected to paying an agency fee under a collective bargaining agreement that allows payment of the fee in lieu of joining the unions, the fee being a payment for the collective bargaining efforts. She objected to paying the fee because one of the unions publicly supports birth control and abortion. The unions must reasonably accommodate her religious beliefs if they can do so without incurring undue hardship. Under federal civil rights law, a union with several means of reasonably accommodating an employee is free to select the one posing the least hardship to the union. Wolfe v. St., 255 M 336, 843 P2d 338, 49 St. Rep. 1042 (1992).

Employment Considerations Not Met — Discrimination Not Addressed: A Human Rights Commission decision that a teacher was unlawfully discriminated against on the basis of marital status was reversed when it was found that the teacher needed to show that he was in a position to be considered for employment, which he failed to demonstrate, before he could invoke the protection of this section. Johnson v. Bozeman School District, 226 M 134, 734 P2d 209, 44 St. Rep. 531 (1987), distinguished in Hearing Aid Institute v. Rasmussen, 258 M 367, 852 P2d 628, 50 St. Rep. 569 (1993).

Human Rights Commission Award of Backpay Contrary to Legal Conclusion of Hearing Examiner: It was not error for the Montana Human Rights Commission to award backpay when the hearing examiner, as a matter of law, refused to do so. After reviewing the record, the Commission may, under 2-4-621, reject or modify an examiner's conclusions of law. The Commission also has the authority under 49-2-506 to use its discretion to rectify harm done a person discriminated against. Unless the conclusions of the Commission in awarding backpay are arbitrary or capricious, which was not the case here, neither the District Court nor the Supreme Court may alter them. European Health Spa v. Human Rights Comm'n, 212 M 319, 687 P2d 1029, 41 St. Rep. 1766 (1984).

Mandatory Game Warden Retirement Without Exception or Justification — Impliedly Repealed: Sections 49-2-303 and 49-3-201, making it unlawful for an employer to refuse employment or discriminate against an employee because of his age when the reasonable demands of the position do not require an age distinction and requiring state officials and personnel to recruit, appoint, treat, and promote personnel without regard to age, being later enacted statutes than the provision of 19-8-601 requiring compulsory retirement of game wardens at age 60, impliedly repealed the retirement provision in order to effectuate the clear intent of the Legislature to prevent all age discrimination in employment unless age is related to job performance. The antidiscrimination statutes are very broad prohibitions with very limited exceptions and indicate legislative intent to abolish all discrimination in employment except under the most limited circumstances. Furthermore, there must be justification for any age discrimination to bring it within the purview of a Title 49 exception to the antidiscrimination prohibitions, and the exceptions will be strictly construed. The game warden (now game wardens' and peace officers') retirement statute contains no justification or qualification. Taylor v. Dept. of Fish, Wildlife, & Parks, 205 M 85, 666 P2d 1228, 40 St. Rep. 1112 (1983), distinguished in Ross v. Great Falls, 1998 MT 276, 291 M 377, 967 P2d 1103, 55 St. Rep. 1127 (1998).

Valid Reason for Mandatory Retirement — Legislative, Not Judicial Task: Since compulsory game warden (now game wardens' and peace officers') retirement statute contained no qualifications or justification, it would be in excess of the authority of a court hearing a warden's suit challenging the statute's validity to hold a factfinding hearing to determine whether there was a basis for the age discrimination grounded in the reasonable demands of the position. Such a determination is a legislative function; the effort would be great; and the Legislature, not the courts, has the resources for such an undertaking. Taylor v. Dept. of Fish, Wildlife, & Parks, 205 M 85, 666 P2d 1228, 40 St. Rep. 1112 (1983).

"Marital Status" Condition of Employment — Antinepotism Policy Discriminatory: Plaintiffs were employed as administrators in the Harlem schools. Their wives were teachers in the Harlem schools. After the school board adopted a policy that administrators could not have a spouse employed in any capacity in the Harlem school system, the board terminated one plaintiff and reduced the other to a teaching position. The board's policy was discriminatory, as the term "marital status" includes the identity and occupation of one spouse as well as whether one is married, single, widowed, or divorced. Thompson v. School District, 192 M 266, 627 P2d 1229, 38 St. Rep. 706 (1981).

PROCEDURES

No Direct Evidence of Discrimination at Trial — Jury Instruction Regarding Motivating Factor for Discrimination Properly Denied: At Stevenson's trial alleging age discrimination, Stevenson proposed a jury instruction establishing that a prima facie case of discrimination arose from evidence from which the jury could infer that Stevenson's termination from employment was motivated by the employer's consideration of Stevenson's age. The trial court concluded that the proposed instruction was duplicative and declined to give the instruction. On appeal, Stevenson contended that the instruction was necessary because the employer gave direct testimony that Stevenson's age was a consideration in terminating employment. The Supreme Court disagreed. From the totality of the employer's testimony, it appeared that the employer was simply referring to a conversation with Stevenson to indicate that Stevenson could not slow down at work. Absent direct evidence of discrimination, the jury instructions as a whole constituted a correct statement of the law, and denial of Stevenson's proposed instruction was not error. Stevenson v. Felco Indus., Inc., 2009 MT 299, 352 M 303, 216 P3d 763 (2009).

Sanction for Failure to Object to Evidence by Motion In Limine — Admission of Patently Inadmissible Evidence Reversible Error: At Stevenson's trial alleging age discrimination, the trial court's scheduling order required that trial objections that could have been resolved by a pretrial motion in limine would be considered waived if not presented in a timely motion in limine. Defendant sought to introduce a Human Rights Bureau report that was patently inadmissible pursuant to Crockett v. Billings, 234 M 87, 761 P2d 813 (1988), but because plaintiff had not addressed the issue by pretrial motion, the trial court allowed the evidence. On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed. In this case, the trial court's establishment in the scheduling order of a waiver of the right to object to inadmissible evidence at trial was a sanction, especially when it resulted in the admission of patently inadmissible evidence. The sanction of waiver of the right to object to demonstrably inadmissible evidence is not recognized in the Montana Rules of Civil Procedure, and the trial court's admission of patently inadmissible evidence constituted reversible error. Stevenson v. Felco Indus., Inc., 2009 MT 299, 352 M 303, 216 P3d 763 (2009).

Foreign Medical Reports Not Considered Self-Authenticating Public Documents: In an employment discrimination case, Pannoni sought to introduce written medical reports in letter form that contained observational information and opinions regarding Pannoni's medical condition and ability to return to work. The letters were accompanied by written certification that the reports had been prepared as part of a Canadian mental health center's regularly conducted business. Pannoni contended that the records were self-authenticating documents under the authentication procedure for foreign public documents in Rule 902, M.R.Ev. (Title 26, ch. 10). The Supreme Court disagreed. Under Palmer v. Farmers Ins. Exch., 233 M 515, 761 P2d 401 (1988), hospital records and medical reports are ordinarily not documents that are self-authenticating and are not considered business records, and even though the reports were from Canada, they were not public documents of a foreign country as contemplated in Rule 902, M.R.Ev. Further, the medical expert who authored the reports was not called as a witness, did not give sworn testimony, and was not subject to cross-examination. Thus, the unsworn medical reports were not subject to any hearsay exception and constituted inadmissible hearsay. Pannoni v. Browning School District No. 9 Bd. of Trustees, 2004 MT 130, 321 M 311, 90 P3d 438 (2004), followed in St. v. Baze, 2011 MT 52, 359 Mont. 411, 251 P.3d 122.

Lacking Business Records Foundation by Records Custodian, Medical Reports Considered Inadmissible Hearsay: In an employment discrimination case, Pannoni sought to introduce written medical reports in letter form that contained observational information and opinions regarding Pannoni's medical condition and ability to return to work. The letters were accompanied by written certification that the reports had been prepared as part of a mental health center's regularly conducted business and were made at or near the time of Pannoni's diagnosis, but no one testified as to the contents of the reports or their status as regular business records. The employer objected to the evidence as hearsay, but Pannoni contended that they were admissible under the business records exception. The District Court concluded that because Pannoni had attempted to lay the foundation for the evidence through written certification prepared by a records custodian who did not testify, the foundational evidence itself was hearsay that could not establish the foundation for admission of otherwise inadmissible hearsay documents. Absent a proper foundation for admission of the evidence, the Supreme Court affirmed. Pannoni v. Browning School District No. 9 Bd. of Trustees, 2004 MT 130, 321 M 311, 90 P3d 438 (2004), followed in St. v. Baze, 2011 MT 52, 359 Mont. 411, 251 P.3d 122.

Failure to Timely File Discrimination Complaint With Commission — Prosecution in District Court Precluded: Skites filed a claim against her employer with the Montana Human Rights Commission 225 days after the most recent or continuing act of employment discrimination. Under 49-2-501, a complaint must be filed within 180 days after the unlawful discriminatory practice occurred or was discovered, and if the complaint is not timely filed, it may not be considered by the Commission. Further, pursuant to Hash v. U.S. W. Communications Serv., 268 M 326, 886 P2d 442 (1994), timely filing before the Commission is a prerequisite to filing an employment discrimination complaint in District Court because Title 49, ch. 2, commonly known as the Montana Human Rights Act, is the exclusive remedy for employment discrimination under Montana law. Skites' complaint was not timely filed with the Commission, thus her ability to prosecute the discrimination complaint in District Court was precluded. The District Court did not err in determining that no genuine issue of material fact existed that would preclude summary judgment for the employer. Skites v. Blue Cross Blue Shield of Mont., 1999 MT 301, 297 M 156, 991 P2d 955, 56 St. Rep. 1213 (1999).

Ability to Demonstrate Later Accrual of Action as Precluding Motion to Dismiss Based on Failure to State Claim — Human Rights Violation Claim: Powell was dismissed from his job with the Salvation Army on February 18, 1994, for the stated reason that he had been drinking on the job that day. Powell asserted that he learned months later that the dismissal was actually based on his past history of alcoholism, and he subsequently filed a grievance charge with the Human Rights Commission, alleging unlawful discrimination. The District Court granted a motion by the Salvation Army to dismiss for failure to state a claim for which relief could be granted for lack of jurisdiction based on Powell's failure to file a timely claim with the Commission. Under 27-2-102, the period of limitation applicable to any given cause of action begins to run when the claim or cause of action accrues, unless otherwise provided by statute. Pursuant to 49-2-501, a cause of action accrues under Title 49, ch. 2, commonly known as the Montana Human Rights Act, when the alleged unlawful discriminatory practice occurred or was discovered. Applying the principles in Hash v. U.S. W. Communication Serv., 268 M 326, 886 P2d 442 (1994), the Supreme Court found that Powell may well be able to demonstrate that his cause of action did not accrue until sometime after his termination and that he had thus complied with the applicable 300-day limitation period. The allegations in Powell's complaint were sufficient to withstand the Salvation Army's motion to dismiss, and the District Court erred in concluding otherwise. The case was remanded for further proceedings. Powell v. Salvation Army, 287 M 99, 951 P2d 1352, 54 St. Rep. 1518 (1997), following Willson v. Taylor, 194 M 123, 634 P2d 1180 (1981).

Saving Statute Inapplicable to Complaint Filed Against Party Not Originally Named in Complaint: On January 8, 1992, Williams filed a charge with the Human Rights Commission (HRC) of racial discrimination in employment against Zortman Mining, Inc. (Zortman), a wholly owned subsidiary of Pegasus Gold Corporation (Pegasus). At Zortman's request, a right-to-sue letter was issued by the HRC. On June 18, 1993, Williams filed a complaint against Pegasus in federal court, but that complaint was dismissed on November 3, 1993, because Williams had not exhausted his administrative remedies. The federal court noted that Williams was attempting to manipulate the diversity jurisdiction of the federal court by naming the foreign parent corporation, Pegasus, but not the Montana subsidiary, Zortman. Naming Zortman as a party would have defeated diversity jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. 1332. On November 9, 1993, after the 90-day period to file following issuance of a right-to-sue letter, Williams filed a complaint in state District Court naming Zortman as the only defendant. Williams asserted that the federal filing satisfied 49-2-509(2) (now repealed) and that the saving statute, 27-2-407, gave him 1 year to refile his complaint following dismissal in federal court. However, Zortman was not named in the federal action. Because the federal action was against a different party, 27-2-407 did not apply. The saving statute applies only when the new complaint and the original complaint are substantially for the same cause of action, including identity of the parties. The statute of limitations in 49-2-509 (now repealed) operated to bar Williams' claim against Zortman because Zortman was not a party to the first suit. As set out in Tietjen v. Heberlein, 54 M 486, 171 P 928 (1918), 27-2-407 applies in cases in which an action has been commenced and, without plaintiff's fault, there is a failure to reach a determination of the merits and the statute of limitations runs during the pendency of the action. Williams v. Zortman Min., Inc., 275 M 510, 914 P2d 971, 53 St. Rep. 289 (1996), following Turner v. Aldor Co. of Nashville, Inc., 827 SW 2d 318 (Tenn. Ct. App. 1991).

Sexual Harassment Claim as Basis for Retaliatory Discharge Claim — Jury Instruction in Context of Only Constitutional Question Inadequate: An employee did not bring a sexual harassment claim as a separate cause of action; rather, specific allegations of harassment formed the basis of the retaliatory discharge claim. The employee's proposed jury instruction would have attempted to tie harassment testimony directly to the wrongful discharge count, but the trial court denied the instruction and instead submitted a special jury form that asked the jury to determine whether the employer engaged in sexual discrimination in violation of Art. II, sec. 4, Mont. Const. The jury found no sexual discrimination, and the court directed verdict for the employer on the wrongful discharge claim. On appeal, the Supreme Court held that the directed verdict was error absent an assurance that the jury was given an appropriate framework in which to tie the employee's testimony to the constitutional language. The jury instruction effectively denied the employee of the opportunity to fully present the wrongful discharge claim. Foster v. Albertsons, Inc., 254 M 117, 835 P2d 720, 49 St. Rep. 638 (1992).

Proper Test Review of Human Rights Commission Decisions: When reviewing a decision of the Montana Human Rights Commission under this section, the proper test is the test set forth in McDonnell Douglas Corp. v. Green, 411 US 792, 36 L Ed 2d 668, 93 S Ct 1817 (1973), rather than the test set forth in Mt. Healthy City School District Bd. of Educ. v. Doyle, 429 US 274, 50 L Ed 2d 471, 97 S Ct 568 (1977). European Health Spa v. Human Rights Comm'n, 212 M 319, 687 P2d 1029, 41 St. Rep. 1766 (1984). See also Johnson v. Bozeman School District, 226 M 134, 734 P2d 209, 44 St. Rep. 531 (1987), Crockett v. Billings, 234 M 87, 761 P2d 813, 45 St. Rep. 1751 (1988), Hearing Aid Institute v. Rasmussen, 258 M 367, 852 P2d 628, 50 St. Rep. 569 (1993), Hafner v. Conoco, Inc., 268 M 396, 886 P2d 947, 51 St. Rep. 1391 (1994), and Vortex Fishing Sys., Inc. v. Foss, 2001 MT 312, 308 M 8, 38 P3d 836 (2001).

Original Action Involving Interpretation of Statute Allowed Without Exhaustion of Administrative Remedies: Game warden mandatorily retired under 19-8-601 lost a complaint proceeding before the Montana Commission for Human Rights, did not pursue further administrative remedies, and brought a District Court action to declare the statute invalid. The exhaustion of administrative remedies doctrine did not preclude redress because: (1) the court action was an original action and not a judicial review of an administrative action, and (2) the Commission ruling was an interpretation of law that must be made by the judiciary. Taylor v. Dept. of Fish, Wildlife, & Parks, 205 M 85, 666 P2d 1228, 40 St. Rep. 1112 (1983).

ELEMENTS OF DISCRIMINATION CLAIMS

No Finding of Malicious Prosecution, Abuse of Process, or Tortious Interference in Employment Discrimination Claim — Judgment as Matter of Law Proper: Lynch filed an employment discrimination claim against doctor Hughes for sexual harassment actions that Hughes took in a hospital in which Lynch was employed. The Commission for Human Rights determined that Hughes was not an employer or agent of an employer, so Hughes did not bear an employer's liability for sexual harassment. Hughes' behavior after Lynch filed the claim was determined to constitute illegal retaliation, but because Lynch did not claim retaliation, the claim was dismissed. Hughes then filed an action in District Court alleging malicious prosecution, abuse of process, and tortious interference. The court found that the claims could not be proved and granted Lynch judgment as a matter of law. Hughes appealed, but the Supreme Court examined each claim and affirmed. First, Hughes could not prove that there was a lack of probable cause for Lynch's action or that the proceeding favored Lynch, so the malicious prosecution claim failed. Second, nothing in the record showed that Lynch used abuse of process to coerce Hughes to do some collateral thing that Hughes could not be legally and regularly compelled to do, so the abuse of process claim also failed. Third, there was no evidence to suggest that Lynch's acts were calculated to damage Hughes, and Lynch was entitled to seek redress and damages for the alleged discrimination, so the tortious interference claim failed as well. Thus, the District Court correctly determined that no genuine issue of material fact existed and that Lynch was entitled to judgment as a matter of law. Hughes v. Lynch, 2007 MT 177, 338 M 214, 164 P3d 913 (2007), following Plouffe v. Dept. of Public Health and Human Services, 2002 MT 64, 309 M 184, 45 P3d 10 (2002), and Comm'n on Unauthorized Practice of Law v. O'Neil, 2006 MT 284, 334 M 311, 147 P3d 200 (2006), and followed in Judd v. Burlington N. & Santa Fe Ry. Co., 2008 MT 181, 343 M 416, 186 P3d 214 (2008), with regard to applicability of the probable cause standard for a malicious prosecution claim.

Full-Time Employment Wage Disparity Not Pleaded in Sex Discrimination Case — Improper Amendment of Pleadings by Hearings Examiner to Include Full-Time Employment Claim — Reversal of Commission Order Affirmed: Sprow brought an employment discrimination case, claiming that because of her sex, she was paid less than other employees at plaintiff's corporation. Sprow had started the job as a full-time employee, but received a pay decrease upon moving to part-time work, at which time she discovered the pay disparity between part-time employees and filed the claim. The hearings examiner reported that plaintiff had provided a legitimate nondiscriminatory reason for paying Sprow less as a part-time employee, but that Sprow had established that for full-time work, Sprow was as qualified as other workers. The hearings examiner concluded that plaintiff had discriminated against Sprow based on pay discrepancies in her full-time employment. In order to reach that conclusion, the hearings examiner amended the original pleadings, which only alleged discrimination regarding part-time employment. Plaintiff appealed to District Court, and the court reversed on grounds that the court had no jurisdiction to determine discrimination in full-time employment because Sprow's complaint concerned only part-time wage disparity. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. Sprow never pleaded wage disparity in full-time employment, the hearings examiner erred by inserting the issue into the pleadings, and the Commission for Human Rights erred by concluding that Sprow had alleged full-time wage disparity based on the improperly amended pleadings. The District Court properly reversed in favor of plaintiff. Centech Corp. v. Sprow, 2006 MT 27, 331 M 98, 128 P3d 1036 (2006).

Sufficient Evidence of Employer's Creation of Hostile Work Environment and Failure to Discipline Offending Supervisor Following Incident of Sexual Harassment: The hearings examiner found that an employee was sexually harassed following an office Christmas party, that the employer failed to discipline the offending employee, and that the employer then created a hostile work environment and sought to find fault with the victim's work in order to fire her and avoid a sexual discrimination suit. Although evidence also existed to support the employer's contrary assertions, under the totality of the circumstances, the hearings examiner's conclusion that the work environment was hostile and abusive was properly upheld by the District Court, and the Supreme Court declined to disturb the agency's findings. Benjamin v. Anderson, 2005 MT 123, 327 M 173, 112 P3d 1039 (2005).

Substantial Evidence Supporting Hearings Examiner's Finding of Sexual Discrimination — Commission for Human Rights Reversal of Hearings Examiner's Findings Reversed: Schmidt was hired as a live-in maid at a motel but was told by the manager that as part of the job, she would be required to have sex with him and with motel customers. Schmidt filed a human rights complaint against the motel manager and the owner, alleging that the manager and the motel discriminated against her on the basis of sex in employment by subjecting her to sexual harassment. A hearings examiner determined that the manager illegally discriminated against Schmidt by subjecting her to quid pro quo sexual harassment as a condition of employment as a maid and that the owner was jointly and severally liable for failing to provide a sexual harassment policy. The owner appealed the final agency decision to the Commission for Human Rights, which reversed the agency decision and dismissed Schmidt's complaint. The District Court affirmed the Commission decision, and Schmidt appealed. The Supreme Court found that although there may have been evidence in the record that supported contrary findings, substantial credible evidence supported the hearings examiner's findings. Thus, the Commission for Human Rights erred in reversing the hearings examiner, and the District Court erred in affirming the Commission. The case was reversed and remanded for further proceedings. Schmidt v. Cook, 2005 MT 53, 326 M 202, 108 P3d 511 (2005).

Elements of Workplace Sexual Harassment — Claim Dismissed Upon Failure to Prove Discriminatory Motive: Campbell worked as the newest member of a plumbing crew and was barraged with offensive sex-themed comments from the all-male crew. The comments nearly always referred to ways that the other crewmembers wanted to use Campbell to sexually gratify themselves. Campbell ultimately brought a sexual harassment claim against the employer, but the claim was dismissed, and Campbell appealed. The Supreme Court noted that there are four requirements that must be met for a plaintiff to establish a prima facie case of hostile environment sexual harassment. A plaintiff must: (1) be a member of a protected class; (2) show that the offensive conduct amounted to actual discrimination because of sex; (3) show that the harassment was unwelcome; and (4) show that the claimed sexual harassment was so severe and pervasive that it altered the conditions of employment and created an abusive work environment. To be sufficiently severe, the work environment must be one that a reasonable person would find hostile and abusive and that plaintiff in fact perceived as hostile and abusive. To determine whether the environment was hostile and abusive, a court must look at all circumstances, including the frequency of the discriminatory conduct, the severity of the conduct and whether it was physically threatening or humiliating or a mere offensive utterance, and whether the conduct unreasonably interfered with the employee's work performance. Here, Campbell met requirements one and three, but failed to meet requirement two by proving a discriminatory motive and that the disturbing treatment was perpetrated because Campbell was male. Because Campbell's claim failed to satisfy requirement two, the court declined to analyze requirement four, and dismissal of the claim was affirmed. Campbell v. Garden City Plumbing & Heating, Inc., 2004 MT 231, 322 M 434, 97 P3d 546 (2004), following Oncale v. Sundowner Offshore Serv., Inc., 523 US 75 (1998).

Assignment of Particular Work Position Not Considered Marital or Sex-Plus Discrimination: Three temporary seasonal positions at the Department of Natural Resources and Conservation (DNRC) were eliminated, including Beaver's position, and three permanent seasonal positions were created, including two 8-month positions and one 6-month position. Beaver was given the 6-month position and later sued DNRC for marital and sex-plus discrimination, based in part on the comment by a supervisor that Beaver did not have to worry about getting the 6-month position because she had recently been married and now had a new husband to support her. DNRC contended that the positions were offered based on experience and training, and it was within the discretion of the District Court to determine the credibility of the witnesses and testimony. Although agreeing that the supervisor's statement was highly inappropriate, the Supreme Court nevertheless held that based on the evidence, the employment decision did not involve marital or sex-plus discrimination and that DNRC did not discriminate against Beaver based on marital status. Beaver v. Dept. of Natural Resources and Conservation, 2003 MT 287, 318 M 35, 78 P3d 857 (2003).

Failure to Establish Prima Facie Case of Employment Discrimination Based on Alleged Retaliation: Three temporary seasonal positions at the Department of Natural Resources and Conservation (DNRC) were eliminated, including Beaver's position, and three permanent seasonal positions were created, including two 8-month positions and one 6-month position. Beaver was given the 6-month position and later sued DNRC for retaliation for Beaver's earlier filing of an employment discrimination complaint against DNRC. Under Wrighten v. Metropolitan Hosp., Inc., 726 F2d 1346 (9th Cir. 1984), a plaintiff bringing an action for retaliation under Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 must first establish a prima facie case by showing that: (1) plaintiff engaged in a protected activity; (2) plaintiff was thereafter subjected to adverse employment action by the employer; and (3) there was a causal link between the two. The District Court correctly concluded that the second and third elements were not satisfied. Although the 6-month position was the less favorable of the three, it was still better than the temporary seasonable position that Beaver had before and thus could not be considered an adverse employment action. Further, credible evidence indicated that the positions were assigned based on experience and training rather than on retaliation for Beaver's filing a complaint. Beaver v. Dept. of Natural Resources and Conservation, 2003 MT 287, 318 M 35, 78 P3d 857 (2003).

Elements of Prima Facie Case of Alleged Employment Discrimination Based on Marital Status: Under the first part of the test for employment discrimination set out in McDonnell Douglas Corp. v. Green, 411 US 792 (1973), plaintiff must first establish a prima facie case of discrimination. In cases of alleged employment discrimination resulting in termination and based on marital status, plaintiff must prove the following prima facie elements: (1) the claimant belonged to a protected class; (2) the claimant was otherwise qualified for continued employment; and (3) the claimant was denied employment under circumstances that raise a reasonable inference that the claimant was treated differently because of membership in the protected class. Here, Foss notified his employer, Vortex Fishing Systems, Inc. (Vortex), of his intention to marry another Vortex employee and was told that under Vortex's unwritten antinepotism policy, a change in his marital status was grounds for termination. Foss quit his employment because of the policy and married within the week. Even though Foss was not married at the time that he quit, he was nevertheless a member of a protected class because it was the change in his marital status that jeopardized his employment. The second element was undisputed because Foss was otherwise qualified for the job and had been a satisfactory employee. Foss also proved the third element because there was no other apparent reason why Foss would have left his job but for his belief that he would soon be fired. The Vortex policy in effect gave Foss a choice between his job and his marriage, and as a member of a protected class, Foss was treated differently and denied further employment with Vortex. Foss established a prima facie case of employment discrimination, and the Commission for Human Rights' holding to that effect was affirmed. (See 2001 amendment.) Vortex Fishing Sys., Inc. v. Foss, 2001 MT 312, 308 M 8, 38 P3d 836 (2001).

Insufficient Evidence of Nondiscriminatory Reasons for Antinepotism Policy — Illegal Discrimination Based on Marital Status Affirmed: Under the second part of the test for employment discrimination set out in McDonnell Douglas Corp. v. Green, 411 US 792 (1973), once plaintiff has established a prima facie case of discrimination, the burden shifts to the employer to rebut the presumption of discrimination by producing a legitimate, nondiscriminatory reason for its actions. Here, Vortex Fishing Systems, Inc. (Vortex), established an unwritten antinepotism policy that prohibited the employment of married employees. The reasons given for the policy were that: (1) supervisors tend to bestow favors upon other employed relatives; (2) when relatives are working and one decides to take time off, it usually results in the other relative also taking time off, which disrupts business; (3) if one relative is terminated, the other relative becomes disgruntled or quits; and (4) the employment of relatives makes pilferage more likely. Employee Foss announced his intention to marry another Vortex employee, but quit when reminded of the antinepotism policy. Foss proved a prima facie case of discrimination, and Vortex's reasons for its actions in adopting the policy were considered unconvincing. The first reason was overly broad because it precluded all individuals from marrying even when no supervisory relationship existed between the employees. The second reason was also rejected because the ability to approve or disapprove leave time lies with the employer. The third and fourth reasons lacked any factual basis. Absent sufficient evidence of nondiscriminatory reasons for the policy, the Commission for Human Rights' conclusion that Vortex discriminated against Foss because of marital status was affirmed. (See 2001 amendment.) Vortex Fishing Sys., Inc. v. Foss, 2001 MT 312, 308 M 8, 38 P3d 836 (2001).

Employment Contingent on Adherence to Teachings of Roman Catholic Church — Discrimination Statutes Inapplicable: Until her termination in 1993, Parker-Bigback was employed by St. Labre School, which is operated by the St. Labre Indian School Education Association, an institution based on the teachings and beliefs of the Roman Catholic Church. Parker-Bigback filed a complaint with the Montana Commission for Human Rights, alleging that she was discriminated against because her termination was based on marital status or sex discrimination. The school maintained that Parker-Bigback's position was eliminated to establish a personnel department, which Parker-Bigback contended was simply a pretext for terminating her employment based on her lifestyle of cohabiting with a man who was not her husband. However, one condition of Parker-Bigback's employment was an agreement to adhere to the moral and religious teachings and beliefs of the Roman Catholic Church and to not engage in any personal conduct or lifestyle contrary to church policies. Thus, it made no difference whether Parker-Bigback was married or single—if she cohabited with someone of the opposite sex to whom she was not married, she would be at variance with church teachings in violation of her contract. Therefore, this was not a case about marital status or gender, but rather about conduct Parker-Bigback agreed to avoid as a condition of employment. Nothing in Art. II, sec. 4, Mont. Const., or this section prohibits discrimination based on conduct, nor was any authority offered to persuade the Supreme Court that Parker-Bigback's conduct involved a right of such high order that it would overcome the school's right to freely exercise its religion through its employment practices. Even if she was terminated for cohabitation, her rights to be free from discrimination were not involved, so her employment discrimination case was properly dismissed by summary judgment for the school. Parker-Bigback v. St. Labre School, 2000 MT 210, 301 M 16, 7 P3d 361, 57 St. Rep. 823 (2000). See also Miller v. Catholic Diocese of Great Falls, 224 M 113, 728 P2d 794 (1986).

Disability Determination on Case-by-Case Basis — High Blood Pressure as Disability: Whether a person is disabled under Title 49, ch. 2, commonly known as the Montana Human Rights Act, cannot be decided as a matter of law, but rather requires a factual determination to be made on a case-by-case basis. Under 49-4-101, to establish a prima facie case of discrimination in employment, an employee must show that the employee belonged to a protected class, that the employee was otherwise qualified for continued employment and that the employment did not subject the employee or others to physical harm, and that continued employment was denied because of the employee's disability. A person is entitled to the protections of the Act not only if the person suffers from a substantially limiting impairment, but also if the person suffers from a condition that is regarded as such an impairment. High blood pressure is an example of a perceived disability. It is no more legal to discriminate against one who exhibits symptoms of a disease than to discriminate against one who suffers from the disease itself. In this case, Reeves was terminated because, in the employer's own words, "it was a combination of having high blood pressure and working in a position as a fast order cook working under conditions of pressure, stress and heat . . . and I decided this would be best for Donna". Reeves met the test for proving a prima facie case under 49-4-101. The District Court erred in summarily dismissing Reeves' claim, and the case was remanded for further proceedings. Reeves v. Dairy Queen, Inc., 1998 MT 13, 287 M 196, 953 P2d 703, 55 St. Rep. 44 (1998).

No Record or Evidence of Mental Impairment Rising to Level of Disability — Particular Job but Not Broad Range of Jobs Precluded: Walker contended that his employer, Montana Power Company (MPC), knew that he suffered from a mental impairment brought about by work-related stress and that he had a documented record of impairment and was regarded as having an impairment. Citing Holihan v. Lucky Stores, Inc., 87 F3d 362 (9th Cir. 1996), the Supreme Court held that depression and anxiety do not render a person disabled within the meaning of 29 CFR 1630.2(j)(3)(i) of the federal Americans With Disabilities Act of 1990 when the depression and anxiety do not prevent that person from working at a broad range of jobs, but only at a particular job. Walker's record of depression and stress was limited at best, and both of his supervisors testified that they did not believe that he had a record of, nor did they perceive that he had, a mental disability. MPC did not treat Walker as if he were limited in all fields of employment, only in the job of lineman supervisor. Thus, the jury could properly have determined that the credible evidence weighed in favor of a finding that Walker did not have a mental impairment that rose to the level of a disability and that he did not have a record of an impairment. Walker v. Mont. Power Co., 278 M 344, 924 P2d 1339, 53 St. Rep. 943 (1996).

Definition of "Otherwise Qualified" for Employment: Under the first stage of the three-stage test for employment discrimination articulated in McDonnell Douglas Corp. v. Green, 411 US 792, 36 L Ed 2d 668, 93 S Ct 1817 (1973), a job applicant must establish four elements in order to make a prima facie case of discrimination, showing: (1) the person is a member of the class protected by the statute; (2) the person applied for and was qualified for the position; (3) the person was rejected despite being qualified for the job; and (4) the position remained open and the employer continued to accept applications from persons with comparable qualifications. In the case at hand, the District Court determined that Hafner failed to establish the second element of the prima facie case. The Supreme Court relied on Chandler v. Dallas, 2 F3d 1385 (5th Cir. 1993), in defining an "otherwise qualified" person as one who is able to meet all of a program's requirements in spite of a handicap. Hafner's initial qualifications for the position were demonstrated by the employer's offer of probationary employment and by the fact that Hafner had done similar work and understood and felt capable of performing the required activities. The District Court erred in determining that Hafner had failed to establish the second element of a prima facie case. Hafner v. Conoco, Inc., 268 M 396, 886 P2d 947, 51 St. Rep. 1391 (1994).

Definition of "Regarded as Having an Impairment": Under the first stage of the three-stage test for employment discrimination articulated in McDonnell Douglas Corp. v. Green, 411 US 792, 36 L Ed 2d 668, 93 S Ct 1817 (1973), a job applicant must establish four elements in order to make a prima facie case of discrimination, showing: (1) the person is a member of the class protected by the statute; (2) the person applied for and was qualified for the position; (3) the person was rejected despite being qualified for the job; and (4) the position remained open and the employer continued to accept applications from persons with comparable qualifications. In the case at hand, the District Court determined that Hafner failed to establish the first element of the prima facie case. By definition in 49-2-101, physical or mental disability means a physical or mental impairment that substantially limits one or more of a person's major life activities, a record of such an impairment, or a condition "regarded as" such an impairment. In interpreting the "regarded as" provision of the definition, the Supreme Court cited Forrisi v. Bowen, 794 F2d 931 (4th Cir. 1986), in finding that an employer regards an employee as handicapped in the ability to work by finding the employee's impairment to foreclose generally the type of employment involved. Because Hafner established as a matter of law that he was "regarded" by the employer as physically disabled, the District Court erred in determining that Hafner had failed to establish the first element of a prima facie case. Hafner v. Conoco, Inc., 268 M 396, 886 P2d 947, 51 St. Rep. 1391 (1994), followed in Butterfield v. Sidney Pub. Schools, 2001 MT 177, 306 M 179, 32 P3d 1243 (2001). On remand, the District Court erred in finding that Hafner's disability precluded him from performance of the position of helper when the question had been previously resolved in Hafner I, ibid., which became the law of the case. The District Court had no jurisdiction to revisit the issue.

Elements of Federal ADEA Claim: To establish a prima facie case under the federal Age Discrimination in Employment Act, one must either provide direct evidence of discrimination or present evidence that the plaintiff was in the protected age group, was performing the job satisfactorily, was discharged, and was replaced by a substantially younger person. The employer then has the burden to articulate a nondiscriminatory reason for the discharge, after which the plaintiff has to prove by a preponderance of the evidence that the employer's reasons are a pretext for discrimination. Tonack v. Mont. Bank of Billings, 258 M 247, 854 P2d 326, 50 St. Rep. 518 (1993).

Federal ADEA Claim Proved by Forty-Nine-Year-Old Woman Bank Employee: Violation of the federal Age Discrimination in Employment Act was shown by a 49-year-old bank employee who presented evidence that: (1) the bank holding company president thought she was too old and should be gotten rid of and that her supervisor would take care of it; (2) she had satisfactory performance reviews and was recently employee of the month; (3) she was erroneously placed on probation by her supervisor after many years of service; (4) before she was fired, business cards had been ordered with her title and a newly hired employee's name; (5) she was fired for not carrying out her supervisor's order to train the new employee for her type of position even though the plaintiff had merely postponed the training because the new employee's temporary replacement for the training period did not show up for work; and (6) the new employee was given her position after she was fired. Tonack v. Mont. Bank of Billings, 258 M 247, 854 P2d 326, 50 St. Rep. 518 (1993).

TESTS OR STANDARD APPLIED IN DISCRIMINATION ANALYSIS

Reasonable Accommodation of Disabled Employee's Service Dog — Employer's Duties to Provide Reasonable Accommodation — Employee's Requested Accommodation Within Scope of Human Rights Act: McDonald was employed by the Department of Environmental Quality (DEQ) as a fiscal officer. As a disabled person, McDonald required the use of a service dog. However, the dog continually slipped on the floors of the DEQ building where McDonald worked, and despite McDonald's repeated requests for DEQ to install nonslip surfaces for the dog, the requested accommodation was still not made 1 ½ years after McDonald's request. McDonald eventually left DEQ and had to retire the dog, which allegedly caused numerous work-related and social problems for McDonald. McDonald then sued DEQ for employment discrimination. The hearings examiner concluded that there was no rational basis for the delay and that McDonald was discriminated against; the examiner imposed injunctive relief and awarded McDonald damages of $10,000 for emotional distress, $18,000 for a replacement service animal, $1,536 for travel expenses to procure the animal, and $333.84 for veterinary expenses. The Human Rights Commission affirmed the agency decision, but the District Court reversed. The court concluded that DEQ met its legal duty to provide a reasonable accommodation by allowing McDonald to use the service dog in the workplace but held that DEQ had no legal duty to provide an accommodation for the service animal. McDonald appealed and the Supreme Court reversed. The court held that the reasonable accommodation requirement is best understood as a means by which barriers to equal employment of disabled persons are removed or alleviated, so if an adjustment or modification is job-related and specifically assists the person in performing the duties of a particular job, it will be considered a type of reasonable accommodation. Employers are not relieved of the duty to accommodate when an employee is already able to perform the essential functions of a job. Rather, an employer is fundamentally obligated to not interfere, either through action or inaction, with a disabled employee's efforts to pursue a normal life. Further, an employer's duty to make reasonable accommodations does not end with allowing an assistive device through the front door. The duty also requires an employer to address any barriers to the employee's ability to actually use the device effectively in the workplace, which includes modification of a floor surface if such an accommodation is otherwise reasonable. In this case, substantial evidence supported the hearings examiner's ultimate finding that McDonald needed an accommodation, and the District Court erred in holding that McDonald's requested accommodation for the service dog was beyond the scope of the DEQ's duty under the Montana Human Rights Act. McDonald v. Dept. of Environmental Quality, 2009 MT 209, 351 M 243, 214 P3d 749 (2009), following Buckingham v. U.S., 998 F2d 735 (9th Cir. 1993).

Quid Pro Quo Sexual Harassment Claim Affirmed: Following the breakdown of their office romance, employer Lowther told employee Williams that the situation was no longer tolerable and offered Williams a severance package, consisting of wages and a lump-sum payment, and the choice to either resume their intimate relationship or leave the job. Williams declined the offer. Lowther reiterated the offer with an increased lump-sum payment, but Williams again refused the offer, so Lowther fired Williams. Williams then filed an employment discrimination suit, alleging sex discrimination when she was subjected to unwelcome quid pro quo sexual harassment culminating in termination from employment by Lowther's corporation. The Department of Labor and Industry found for Williams and ordered the corporation to pay Williams $30,155.13 in damages. Lowther appealed to the Commission for Human Rights, which affirmed the agency's decision, and then to District Court. The court held that Williams had made a prima facie showing of quid pro quo sexual discrimination and affirmed the award, and Lowther appealed to the Supreme Court. Without adopting a formal test for quid pro quo sexual discrimination, the court deferred to federal guidelines and affirmed. Lowther did not challenge the finding that even after terminating Williams' employment, he offered Williams the choice of having her job back if she resumed the intimate relationship, and this finding demonstrated that submission to or rejection of that conduct by Williams was used as the basis for employment decisions affecting her, in violation of 29 CFR 1604.11. Williams v. Joe Lowther Ins. Agency, Inc., 2008 MT 46, 341 M 394, 177 P3d 1018 (2008).

Plaintiff Subject to McDonnell Douglas Test to Prove Employment Discrimination: Ray argued that his position as department head at Montana Tech of the University of Montana was not renewed because of his environmental activities and criticism of engineering students and also because of his marital status because one of the administrators was opposed to his being married to another member of the faculty. The Commission for Human Rights determined that the university had presented legitimate reasons for the nonrenewal and found for the school. The decision was upheld by the District Court. On appeal, Ray asserted that he was not subject to the McDonnell Douglas test adopted by the Montana Supreme Court in Martinez v. Yellowstone County Welfare Dept., 192 M 42, 626 P2d 242 (1981). The Supreme Court found that Ray had not presented any direct evidence that he was discriminated against based upon his political beliefs or marital status and therefore was subject to the test that provides that a plaintiff, relying on circumstantial evidence, has the initial burden of proving a prima facie case of discrimination. However, if the other party then meets its burden of rebutting the prima facie case, the burden reverts to the plaintiff. The Supreme Court agreed with the Commission for Human Rights that Ray had met the initial burden. However, the Supreme Court ruled that Montana Tech had then met its burden of showing legitimate reasons for the nonrenewal, which were supported by substantial credible evidence. The Supreme Court upheld the Commission's and District Court's findings that Montana Tech had presented reasons for the nonrenewal that were not pretextual, and that shifted the burden back to Ray who had not presented any convincing evidence that the reasons given for the nonrenewal were pretextual. Ray v. Mont. Tech of the Univ. of Mont., 2007 MT 21, 335 M 367, 152 P3d 122 (2007).

Failure to Establish Elements of Prima Facie Retaliation Case — Partial Summary Judgment Proper: The elements of a prima facie case under Title VII of the federal Civil Rights Act of 1964 are: (1) the plaintiff engaged in a protected activity; (2) thereafter, the employer took an adverse employment action against the plaintiff; and (3) a causal link existed between the protected activity and the employer's action. In cases under this chapter, commonly known as the Montana Human Rights Act, elements of a prima facie retaliation case generally consist of proof that the charging party was qualified for employment, was engaged in a protected activity, and was subjected to adverse action, as well as proof of a causal connection or other circumstances raising a reasonable inference that the charging party was treated differently because of the protected activity. In the present case, the Supreme Court applied the three-prong burden-shifting test for summary judgment motions in disparate treatment cases set forth in Heiat v. E. Mont. College, 275 M 322, 912 P2d 787 (1996), to evaluate whether Rolison's complaint constituted a prima facie case. Rolison established the protected activity element of a prima facie case by filing a gender discrimination case that the employer was aware of. However, Rolison failed to raise a genuine issue of material fact regarding the adverse employment action of the retaliation claim, thus failing the Heiat test for a prima facie case, so partial summary judgment for the employer on the state and federal discrimination claims was proper. Rolison v. Bozeman Deaconess Health Serv., Inc., 2005 MT 95, 326 M 491, 111 P3d 202 (2005). See also Wrighten v. Metropolitan Hosp., Inc., 726 F2d 1346 (9th Cir. 1984), and Beaver v. Indefinite Leave of Absence Not Considered Reasonable Accommodation — Standard for Ascertaining Whether Person Qualified Individual Deserving of Reasonable Accommodation: After Pannoni was terminated from his teaching job for excessive absences, Pannoni filed a discrimination complaint alleging that he had been terminated because of a mental disability and that the school district failed to accommodate his disability by granting continued unpaid leaves of absence. The Department of Labor and Industry concluded that Pannoni was not able to perform essential job functions and therefore was not a qualified person for the teaching position. The Commission for Human Rights and the District Court agreed, and on appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. Although an employer has a duty to provide a reasonable accommodation to a person with a disability if the accommodation allows the person to perform essential job functions, an employer is not required to accommodate an employee who suffers from a prolonged illness by allowing the employee an indefinite leave of absence, nor is an employer required to grant a second leave if the employee's condition recurs after return from the first leave. The requirement to grant a leave of absence cannot be repeatedly invoked to permit an unqualified employee to avoid termination by requesting leave each time that the employee is about to be fired. Although Pannoni suggested a lenient plausibility standard for determining whether an accommodation is reasonable, the Supreme Court applied the standard already in Montana administrative law that a person with a disability is qualified to hold an employment position if the person can perform the essential functions of the job with or without a reasonable accommodation for the disability. Pannoni could not show that he was a qualified individual capable of performing essential teaching functions even with a reasonable accommodation, so the discrimination claim failed. Pannoni v. Browning School District No. 9 Bd. of Trustees, 2004 MT 130, 321 M 311, 90 P3d 438 (2004), following Kimbro v. Atl. Richfield Co., 889 F2d 869 (9th Cir. 1989), Nowak v. St. Rita High School, 142 F3d 999 (7th Cir. 1998), and Humphrey v. Mem. Hosp. Ass'n, 239 F3d 1128 (9th Cir. 2001).

Single Incident of Sexual Assault — Work Environment That Is Not Subjectively Objectionable Not Considered Type of Hostile Environment to Be Actionable Under Title VII — Standard of Review: Following a single incident of sexual assault by a coworker, Beaver brought a claim against the Department of Natural Resources and Conservation (DNRC) under the Montana governmental code of fair practices; Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964; and this chapter, commonly known as the Montana Human Rights Act, asserting that the incident was sufficiently severe or pervasive to alter employment conditions and to create a hostile and abusive working environment. Under Harris v. Forklift Sys., Inc., 510 US 17 (1993), to be sufficiently severe or pervasive to violate Title VII and establish a claim, the misconduct must create a working environment that is both objectively and subjectively offensive and that a reasonable person and the victim perceive as hostile and abusive. The correct legal standard for determining whether an environment is hostile or abusive under Title VII is to review the totality of the circumstances, including: (1) the frequency of the discriminatory conduct; (2) the severity of the conduct, whether it is physically threatening or humiliating or a mere offensive utterance; and (3) whether the conduct interferes with an employee's work performance. Psychological well-being is one factor among many in the determination. Here, the coworker was dismissed following the incident, and Beaver continued working for DNRC, testifying that conditions of employment did not change following the assault. Thus, the District Court correctly concluded that the work environment was not subjectively objectionable to Beaver and that the single incident of sexual assault did not create the type of hostile or abusive environment actionable under Title VII. Beaver v. Dept. of Natural Resources and Conservation, 2003 MT 287, 318 M 35, 78 P3d 857 (2003).

Mixed Motive Analysis Applicable When Parties Disagree on Reason for Refusing to Hire: Laudert suffered liver failure while employed by the Richland County Sheriff's Department (RCSD) and had to resign. Following Laudert's full recovery, his former position came open again and he applied but was not rehired. He filed a discrimination charge on grounds of age and disability. The hearings examiner found that questions asked by the RCSD interview panel constituted direct evidence that RCSD had unlawfully considered Laudert's disability, but did not award damages because Laudert would not have been hired even in the absence of any unlawful consideration of his disability. RCSD maintained that Laudert was not hired because of his employment history. The hearings examiner determined that this was a "mixed motive" case. On review, the District Court concluded that European Health Spa v. Human Rights Comm'n, 212 M 319, 687 P2d 1029 (1984), precluded it from applying the mixed motive approach, so the court instead applied the burden-shifting approach in McDonnell Douglas Corp. v. Green, 411 US 792 (1973). However, the McDonnell Douglas test applies to claims involving circumstantial evidence of unlawful discrimination or pretext, while in this case, Laudert presented direct evidence of discrimination, rendering the McDonnell Douglas test inapplicable under Trans World Airlines, Inc. v. Thurston, 469 US 111 (1985). On appeal, Laudert maintained that Reeves v. Dairy Queen, 1998 MT 13, 287 M 196, 953 P2d 703 (1998), should apply because that decision stated that when discrimination is proved by direct evidence, the employer must prove by a preponderance of the evidence that an unlawful motive played no role in the challenged action or that the direct evidence was not credible. However, the Reeves approach was not directly on point either, because Reeves pertains only to instances in which the parties do not dispute the employer's reasons for the challenged action. The Supreme Court held that the District Court should have applied the mixed motive analysis contained in Price

Waterhouse v. Hopkins, 490 US 228 (1989), as suggested by the hearings examiner. Laudert v. Richland County Sheriff's Dept., 2000 MT 218, 301 M 114, 7 P3d 386, 57 St. Rep. 872 (2000).

Direct Evidence of Discriminatory Intent — Standard of Proof — Heiat Criteria Applicable to Cases Involving Circumstantial Evidence: The summary judgment burdens of proof discussed in Heiat v. E. Mont. College, 275 M 322, 912 P2d 787 (1996), are not limited only to cases of sex discrimination brought under federal law, but rather apply in all types of discrimination cases whether based on federal or state law. However, the Heiat test is confined to use in cases in which discriminatory intent can only be proved by circumstantial evidence. In a direct evidence case, one in which the parties do not dispute the reason for the employer's action but only whether that action is illegal discrimination, the standard is that the employer must prove by a preponderance of the evidence that an unlawful motive played no role in the challenged action or that the direct evidence of discrimination is not credible and is unworthy of belief. That method of proof, as set out in ARM 24.9.610(5), is the proper test in cases in which the plaintiff presents direct evidence of discrimination. Traditional summary judgment principles apply to direct evidence discrimination cases, requiring the moving party to establish that no material issues of fact exist and that the movant is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. If the employer is the moving party, the employer has the burden of showing that no issues of material fact remain and that plaintiff cannot prove a prima facie case of discrimination as a matter of law. Reeves v. Dairy Queen, Inc., 1998 MT 13, 287 M 196, 953 P2d 703, 55 St. Rep. 44 (1998), clarified and followed in Hafner v. Conoco, Inc., 1999 MT 68, 293 M 542, 977 P2d 330, 56 St. Rep. 277 (1999).

Burden-Shifting Analysis in Employment Discrimination Cases — Pretext for Discrimination: Under the rationale in Tex. Dept. of Community Affairs v. Burdine, 450 US 248, 67 L Ed 2d 207, 101 S Ct 1089 (1981) (citing McDonnell Douglas Corp. v. Green, 411 US 792, 36 L Ed 2d 668, 93 S Ct 1817 (1973)), according to the U.S. Supreme Court's burden-shifting analysis employed in discrimination cases, once a plaintiff has proved a prima facie case of employment discrimination by a preponderance of the evidence, the burden shifts to the defendant to articulate some legitimate, nondiscriminatory reason for the employee's rejection. Should the defendant carry this burden, the plaintiff must then have an opportunity to prove by a preponderance of the evidence that the legitimate reason offered by the defendant was not the true reason, but rather was a pretext for discrimination, and under St. Mary's Honor Ctr. v. Hicks, 509 US 502, 125 L Ed 2d 407, 113 S Ct 2742 (1993), the reason cannot be proved to be a pretext for discrimination unless it is shown both that the reason was false and that discrimination was the real reason. At this point, the burden merges with the ultimate burden of persuading the court that the plaintiff has been a victim of intentional discrimination. The plaintiff succeeds either directly by persuading the court that a discriminatory reason more likely motivated the employer or indirectly by showing that the employer's proffered explanation is unworthy of credence. The Montana Supreme Court held in Kenyon v. Stillwater County, 254 M 142, 835 P2d 742 (1992), that in order to survive a motion for summary judgment, the plaintiff has the initial burden to adduce facts that, if believed, support a reasonable inference that the plaintiff was denied an employment opportunity and, if the employer rebuts the inference of discrimination with evidence of legitimate, nondiscriminatory reasons, to demonstrate with specific facts that the employer's explanation is a pretext. This places the plaintiff, as nonmoving party in the summary judgment context, in the peculiar position of having to prove the case to survive the defendant's summary motion. The Kenyon requirements are thus overruled, and the Burdine analysis is adopted for employment discrimination cases. The plaintiff is required to raise an inference of pretext as opposed to proving pretext, so the burden is more aligned with the general requirement of raising a genuine issue of material fact to survive the motion for summary judgment. Heiat v. E. Mont. College, 275 M 322, 912 P2d 787, 53 St. Rep. 162 (1996), overruling Kenyon v. Stillwater County, 254 M 142, 835 P2d 742 (1992), and followed in Rolison v. Bozeman Deaconess Health Serv., Inc., 2005 MT 95, 326 M 491, 111 P3d 202 (2005).

Risk of Future Injury as Nondiscriminatory Reason for Precluding Employment — Mantolete Standard: After plaintiff establishes a prima facie case of employment discrimination, the burden shifts to the employer to rebut the presumption of discrimination by producing a legitimate, nondiscriminatory reason for failure to hire. In Mantolete v. Bolger, 767 F2d 1416 (9th Cir. 1985), cited with approval in Hearing Aid Institute v. Rasmussen, 258 M 367, 852 P2d 628 (1993), the level to which risk of future injury must rise in order to stand as a nondiscriminatory reason disqualifying an applicant from employment must be based on a showing of a reasonable probability of substantial harm. The Supreme Court declined to cite the Mantolete standard as controlling because of the argument that any progressive condition may subject an employee to potential physical harm. However, the court agreed that the Mantolete standard provided useful guidance in relation to pretext. Because plaintiff established a genuine issue of material fact as to whether the employer's withdrawal of a job offer was pretextual, summary dismissal of the discrimination complaint constituted reversible error. Hafner v. Conoco, Inc., 268 M 396, 886 P2d 947, 51 St. Rep. 1391 (1994). Hafner having proved pretext under Hafner I, ibid., the burden then shifted to Conoco to prove absence of unlawful motive under the test in Reeves v. Dairy Queen, Inc., 1998 MT 13, 287 M 196, 953 P2d 703 (1998). In light of Reeves, the Supreme Court nevertheless applied the Mantolete standard, holding that when an employer defends an employment discrimination case by asserting risk of harm, the employer has a duty to independently assess that risk in accordance with ARM 24.9.606(8), regardless of whether the case arises under the McDonnell or Reeves burden-shifting tests and whether the alleged risk of harm is directed to the employee's initial qualifications or the existence of reasonable qualifications. In determining whether an employer has discharged its duty in this regard, a District Court must make specific findings concerning with whom the employer spoke about the risk of substantial harm and whether the employer took into account all relevant information concerning the risk of harm, including: (1) the seriousness of the employee's injury; (2) the employee's work history; (3) the employee's medical history; and (4) the existence of reasonable accommodations that could possibly reduce the risk of substantial harm to the employee. Failure to make specific findings constituted reversible error. Hafner v. Conoco, Inc., 1999 MT 68, 293 M 542, 977 P2d 330, 56 St. Rep. 277 (1999).

Disparate Impact — May Be Established Without Elaborate Statistical Proof — Can Be Inferred From Word-of-Mouth Advertising by Employer: Byard's expert witnesses testified that Montana Rail Link's job interviewers did not follow any written or organized interview plan, thereby producing interviews that were infused with the stereotyping and biases of the interviewers and when combined with statistical evidence showing the disproportionate number of women selected to fill positions, that demonstrated the existence of discriminatory practices. The witnesses were not able to produce extensive statistical proof regarding the sexual breakdown of persons hired for specific job categories, partly because of Montana Rail Link's recordkeeping processes and partly because of resistance on the employer's part to produce the requested material. The Supreme Court held that a case of disparate impact can be established without elaborate statistical proof. The Supreme Court also held that courts can infer a disparate impact upon a protected class from the use of word-of-mouth advertising by the employer. Mont. Rail Link v. Byard, 260 M 331, 860 P2d 121, 50 St. Rep. 1084 (1993).

Pretext for Discrimination — May Be Proved Indirectly: Byard brought a sex discrimination complaint against Montana Rail Link based on its hiring practices. The Supreme Court held that Byard had met her burden to establish a prima facie case of discrimination, thereby shifting the burden to Montana Rail Link to articulate some legitimate reason for not hiring the complainant to rebut the prima facie case, and that the company had set forth a legitimate reason for rejecting Byard. The Supreme Court additionally held that Byard then had the right to prove that the legitimate reasons given by the employer were a pretext for discrimination and could prove the pretext indirectly by showing that the employer's explanation was unworthy of belief. Mont. Rail Link v. Byard, 260 M 331, 860 P2d 121, 50 St. Rep. 1084 (1993).

Requirements to Prove Discrimination by Disparate Impact: Byard's expert witnesses testified that Montana Rail Link's job interviewers did not follow any written or organized interview plan, thereby producing interviews that were infused with the stereotyping and biases of the interviewers. When combined with statistical evidence showing the disproportionate number of women selected to fill positions, the subjective procedures demonstrated the existence of discriminatory practices. The Supreme Court held that, in order to establish a prima facie case of disparate impact, the complainant must demonstrate that it is the application of a specific employment practice that has created the disparate impact under attack. If the employer is able to produce a business justification for the practice at issue, the complainant must be given the chance to show that other selection devices, without the undesirable effect, would also serve the employer's legitimate hiring interests. Mont. Rail Link v. Byard, 260 M 331, 860 P2d 121, 50 St. Rep. 1084 (1993).

Proof Forty-Nine-Year-Old Woman Replaced by Substantially Younger Person: In an action under the federal Age Discrimination in Employment Act, a finding that the plaintiff bank employee was replaced by a substantially younger employee was supported by her supervisor's deposition stating that another employee who had resigned withdrew her resignation after the plaintiff was discharged and assumed some of the plaintiff's duties and by the plaintiff's testimony that the other employee was much younger than the plaintiff. Tonack v. Mont. Bank of Billings, 258 M 247, 854 P2d 326, 50 St. Rep. 518 (1993).

Proof of Age Discrimination Against Forty-Nine-Year-Old Woman: In an action under the federal Age Discrimination in Employment Act, findings concerning the bank holding company president's discrimination toward a discharged 49-year-old female bank employee were supported by testimony of the bank vice president that the president said that he did not believe the plaintiff was right for her position because of her age and background, that he had encouraged those responsible to make a change because he did not want the plaintiff in her position, and that he felt that the plaintiff's supervisor (who later fired the plaintiff) would "get it handled". The finding that the president could influence hiring and firing was supported by the vice president's testimony that the president could prevent the vice president from making the plaintiff the teller supervisor. Tonack v. Mont. Bank of Billings, 258 M 247, 854 P2d 326, 50 St. Rep. 518 (1993).

Inference of Age Discrimination — Failure to Present Facts Indicating Dismissal a Pretext — Summary Judgment Proper: In the context of a summary judgment motion in an age discrimination action under 29 U.S.C. 621, et seq., the plaintiff need only adduce facts that, if believed, support a reasonable inference of the denial of an employment opportunity because of discriminatory age criteria. If that burden is met, the employer must rebut the inference of discrimination with evidence of legitimate, nondiscriminatory reasons that the plaintiff was not hired or was terminated. Upon such a showing, the burden shifts back to the employee to demonstrate with specific facts that the employer's explanation is a pretext. In this case, Kenyon was in the protected age class, met the minimum job qualifications, and was discharged and replaced by a younger woman, which was sufficient to support a reasonable inference of age discrimination. The employer then established that there were problems with Kenyon's work performance, number of absences, and time spent on nonprofessional duties over a long period of time and that there was a documented probation for poor work performance. Kenyon admitted by deposition that her employer's dissatisfaction with her work performance was apparent by his yelling at her on an almost daily basis. This evidence was sufficient to rebut the inference of discrimination. Kenyon subsequently failed to present specific facts that indicated that the employer's explanation for her dismissal was a pretext, relying only on conclusory assertions of discrimination raised in her affidavit. Kenyon therefore failed to raise a genuine issue of material fact as to her age discrimination claim, and summary dismissal in favor of the employer was proper. Kenyon v. Stillwater County, 254 M 142, 835 P2d 742, 49 St. Rep. 673 (1992), following Foster v. Arcata Assoc., Inc., 772 F2d 1453 (9th Cir. 1985), and overruled, with regard to plaintiff's burden to adduce facts that, if believed, support a reasonable inference that plaintiff was denied an employment opportunity and, if the employer rebuts the inference of discrimination with evidence of legitimate, nondiscriminatory reasons, to demonstrate with specific facts that the employer's explanation is a pretext, in Heiat v. E. Mont. College, 275 M 322, 912 P2d 787, 53 St. Rep. 162 (1996).

Exclusion of Evidence in Age Discrimination Case: It was within the discretion of the District Court in an age discrimination case to exclude: (1) refinery yield statements; (2) evidence respecting new construction at the refinery; (3) evidence whether the reduction of force was caused by mismanagement of the company; (4) evidence relating to the relationship of the cost of labor to the cost of producing a refined product at the refinery; (5) evidence regarding the benefits of plaintiff's job to the company and his ability to fill the job; and (6) an exhibit that did not relate to age discrimination. Moreover, it was not error to allow defendant to offer evidence showing the necessity of the cost containment program that led to the reduction in force. Mahan v. Farmers Union Cent. Exch., Inc., 235 M 410, 768 P2d 850, 46 St. Rep. 96 (1989).

Past Job Performance — Legitimate Reason Not to Hire: Plaintiff alleged employment discrimination based on marital status. Defendant cited its reason not to hire plaintiff was the plaintiff's poor past job performance and offered substantial credible evidence to support its contention. In applying the three-tier test of McDonnell Douglas Corp. v. Green, 411 US 792, 36 L Ed 2d 668, 93 S Ct 1817 (1973), the court held that past conduct may be relevant to an employer's assessment of present fitness for a job and that poor past performance constitutes a legitimate nondiscriminatory reason not to hire. The defendant therefore met its burden (under the second tier of the McDonnell Douglas test) to "articulate some legitimate, nondiscriminatory reason for the employee's rejection". Crockett v. Billings, 234 M 87, 761 P2d 813, 45 St. Rep. 1751 (1988).

Gender — Bona Fide Occupational Qualification for Second School Guidance Counselor Position: Male applicant for school counselor position filed a sex discrimination complaint against school district that chose to consider only female applicants for a second counselor position when first position was already filled by a man. The Montana Human Rights Commission found in petitioner's favor and ordered payment of lost salary. The District Court reversed and ordered the Commission to vacate its findings and dismiss the charge of sex discrimination. The Supreme Court affirmed the District Court order and held that an employer can discriminate on the basis of gender when the reasonable demands of the position require a sex discrimination. The Supreme Court found that there was substantial credible evidence to support the District Court's finding that there was a compelling privacy interest in providing counselors of both sexes; therefore, gender was a bona fide occupational qualification for the position and the school district could discriminate on the basis of gender. Stone v. Belgrade School District, 217 M 309, 703 P2d 136, 41 St. Rep. 2436 (1984).

Employee Sensitivity Not Sufficient to Support Discrimination Claim: Petitioner filed an employment discrimination claim with the Human Rights Commission alleging that he was forced to resign from his position as a welder with respondent because of racial harassment. The hearing examiner found that although rough language and ethnic joking were common in the workplace, they were not directed toward petitioner. The hearing examiner also found that petitioner had failed to bring his allegations to respondent's attention. On appeal, the court affirmed the hearing examiner's finding that the sensitivity of an employee to casual remarks, isolated incidents of harassment, or an occasional racial slur is not sufficient to support a discrimination claim. Snell v. Montana-Dakota Util. Co., 198 M 56, 643 P2d 841, 39 St. Rep. 763 (1982).

Scienter of Employer Not Necessary: The director of a county welfare department denied the complainant's employment application based upon recommendations of his subordinates. The complainant was not required to prove that the director knew she was black when he denied her application. To require scienter on the part of an employer effectively destroys the rule developed in federal case law that once certain factual elements are proved prima facie, an inference of discrimination is created by law. A requirement of scienter is also contrary to the rationale expressed in Bd. of Trustees v. State ex rel. Bd. of Personnel Appeals, 185 M 89, 604 P2d 770 (1979), that employers relying upon tainted employee evaluations may not insulate themselves from charges of discrimination by claiming a lack of knowledge. Martinez v. Yellowstone County Welfare Dept., 192 M 42, 626 P2d 242, 38 St. Rep. 474 (1981).

USE OF STATISTICAL TESTIMONY

Age Discrimination — Scope of Statistical Expert Testimony: Statisticians may testify that their statistics do or do not show patterns of discrimination based on age but may not testify to the ultimate conclusion that age discrimination was or was not exercised in an employment termination. Mahan v. Farmers Union Cent. Exch., Inc., 235 M 410, 768 P2d 850, 46 St. Rep. 96 (1989).

Limitation of Testimony of Statistician With Regard to Age Discrimination — Union Versus Nonunion Employees: The District Court correctly limited the age discrimination testimony of plaintiff's statistical expert to testimony of statistical tests performed only on nonunion employees when the inclusion of union employees (whose employment contracts contained seniority rights) in the statistical population would skew the figures affecting older terminated nonunion employees as to the probability that older nonunion employees were discriminated against on the basis of age. Mahan v. Farmers Union Cent. Exch., Inc., 235 M 410, 768 P2d 850, 46 St. Rep. 96 (1989).

APPLICABILITY OF ACT — REMEDY

Human Rights Complaint — Gravamen Test No Longer Applicable: The plain language of the Montana Human Rights Act, Title 49, ch. 2, after its 2007 amendments, states that a charging party may file a complaint in District Court once the Human Rights Bureau dismisses a complaint as long as the party complies with 49-2-511. Thus it is no longer necessary to apply a "gravamen" analysis when determining whether a suit may be filed in District Court following the notice of dismissal. A "gravamen" analysis may still be proper in a claim alleging discrimination that is filed in District Court without first filing a claim before the Human Rights Bureau and receiving a notice of dismissal. Griffith v. Butte School Dist. No. 1, 2010 MT 246, 358 Mont. 193, 244 P.3d 321.

Pursuit of Discrimination or Tort Claim Based on Gravamen of Complaint: In determining whether a claimant has stated a tort claim or a discrimination claim, the Supreme Court looks to the gravamen of the complaint. When the gravamen is ascertained, the complaint is designated as either a tort action or a discrimination action. If the alleged conduct falls outside the definition of unlawful discrimination in this chapter, commonly known as the Montana Human Rights Act (MHRA), a plaintiff may maintain a tort action. However, because the MHRA establishes the exclusive means of legal redress for unlawful discrimination, the plaintiff may not simultaneously proceed in District Court with a discrimination claim based on the same allegations when it is determined that the complaint sounds in tort. Saucier v. McDonald's Restaurants of Mont., 2008 MT 63, 342 M 29, 179 P3d 481 (2008), distinguished in Griffith v.

Butte School Dist. No. 1, 2010 MT 246, 358 Mont. 193, 244 P.3d 321, after 2007 amendment of Montana Human Rights Act. See also Harrison v. Chance, 244 M 215, 797 P2d 200 (1990).

Wrongful Discharge Claim Not Premised on Discrimination Not Precluded by Dismissal of Employment Discrimination Claim — Summary Dismissal of Wrongful Discharge Claim Improper: Plaintiff filed a wrongful discharge from employment claim and an employment discrimination claim. The Department of Labor and Industry found no grounds for the discrimination claim, and the District Court subsequently granted defendant summary judgment on both claims, finding that the exclusive remedy provisions of Montana employment discrimination law precluded the wrongful discharge claim. Plaintiff appealed on grounds that dismissal of the discrimination claim did not preclude the wrongful discharge claim and that genuine issues of material fact existed in support of the wrongful discharge claim. The Supreme Court agreed on both issues. Discrimination can occur without a wrongful discharge and vice versa. When a plaintiff charges discrimination but fails to demonstrate a prima facie case warranting recovery, dismissal of the discrimination claim does not preclude a wrongful discharge claim that is not based on underlying claims of discrimination. In this case, plaintiff raised genuine issues of material fact regarding the legitimacy of the proffered reasons for his discharge that were outside the scope of discrimination, and it was error for the District Court to summarily dismiss the wrongful discharge claim. The case was remanded for trial on the wrongful discharge claim. Vettel-Becker v. Deaconess Medical Center of Billings, Inc., 2008 MT 51, 341 M 435, 177 P3d 1034 (2008), followed, with regard to a claim in tort, in Saucier v. McDonald's Restaurants of Mont., 2008 MT 63, 342 M 29, 179 P3d 481 (2008). See also Tonack v. Mont. Bank of Billings, 258 M 247, 854 P2d 326 (1993), and Arthur v. Pierre Ltd., 2004 MT 303, 323 M 453, 100 P3d 987 (2004).

Temporary, Nonchronic Condition Not Considered Disability — Human Rights Act Claim Properly Dismissed: Adamson injured his shoulder off the job and was allowed to return to work with lifting restrictions, but the County Commission denied reinstatement to his former job. Adamson returned to work after 6 months with no restrictions, underwent surgery 3 months later, and was released to work 1 month later with restrictions, but again the County Commission denied his request to return to work until he had no restrictions. Adamson ultimately returned to work with a full release and worked until retirement, but subsequently filed a complaint with the Commission for Human Rights, claiming financial loss because of discrimination by the County Commission for his temporary disabilities. A hearings examiner and the Commission held for the county, and the District Court affirmed the decision after finding that Adamson was not disabled pursuant to Title 49, ch. 2, commonly known as the Montana Human Rights Act. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. Noting that the determination of a disability is made on a case-by-case basis, the Supreme Court held that Adamson's temporary, nonchronic impairment of short duration, with little or no long-term permanent impact, was not a disability as defined in this section. Other similar impairments not considered to be disabilities may include but are not limited to broken hips, sprained joints, concussions, appendicitis, and influenza (see the interpretive guidelines in 29 CFR 1630.2(j)). Adamson v. Pondera County, 2004 MT 27, 319 M 378, 84 P3d 1048 (2004), distinguishing Martinell v. Mont. Power Co., 268 M 292, 886 P2d 421 (1994), and Butterfield v. Sidney Pub. Schools, 2001 MT 177, 306 M 179, 32 P3d 1243 (2001).

Recovery Under Both Wrongful Discharge Act and Federal ADEA Barred: The Montana Wrongful Discharge From Employment Act provides that it does not apply to a discharge subject to any other state or federal statute providing a remedy. A discharged bank employee could not recover under both the wrongful discharge act and the federal Age Discrimination in Employment Act. Concurrent claims may be filed under the wrongful discharge act and under any other state or federal statutes, but if the plaintiff obtains an affirmative determination under the other statutes, the wrongful discharge claim no longer applies. The Supreme Court declined to follow two recent Montana federal District Court cases allowing concurrent actions based on separate and distinct factual predicates, and to the extent that this conclusion changes the holding in Deeds v. Decker Coal Co., 246 M 220, 805 P2d 1270 (1990), the opinion in that case is modified. In this case, the claims were made in the same action, and once it was determined that the federal Age Discrimination in Employment Act was violated, the wrongful discharge act did not apply. Tonack v. Mont. Bank of Billings, 258 M 247, 854 P2d 326, 50 St. Rep. 518 (1993).

Sexual Harassment as Sexual Discrimination: Current authority supports the conclusion that by definition sexual harassment constitutes sexual discrimination. Therefore, a claim of sexual harassment in employment falls under the exclusive remedy provisions of this chapter, often referred to as the Montana Human Rights Act. Harrison v. Chance, 244 M 215, 797 P2d

200, 47 St. Rep. 1539 (1990), followed in Shields v. Helena School District No. 1, 284 M 138, 943 P2d 999, 54 St. Rep. 815 (1997).

Arbitrator's Discrimination Award Proper: The defendant school district was required by the collective bargaining agreement to pay 85% of the teachers' medical insurance costs. The district had been paying 100% of the costs when both spouses worked for the district. The arbitrator ruled that the district had to pay the single teachers for the amount of benefits they had not received in the past. The Supreme Court upheld the order, stating that the remedy for a discrimination violation is to make the injured party whole. The court held that the district could pay 85% of all teachers' medical insurance costs in the future but had to pay the single teachers for the past inequity. Glasgow Educ. Ass'n v. Bd. of Trustees, 242 M 478, 791 P2d 1367, 47 St. Rep. 898 (1990).

Human Rights Act Not Exclusive Remedy for Sexual Harassment: When plaintiff failed to obtain a "right-to-sue" letter from the Commission for Human Rights prior to filing a civil suit alleging sexual harassment, the District Court granted summary judgment for defendants. On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed, ruling that the 180-day statute of limitations provision provided in 49-2-501 demonstrates legislative intent that the Human Rights Act not be the sole and exclusive remedy for acts which also give rise to an independent, common law cause of action. Drinkwalter v. Shipton Supply Co., Inc., 225 M 380, 732 P2d 1335, 44 St. Rep. 318 (1987), distinguished in Frigon v. Morrison-Maierle, Inc., 233 M 113, 760 P2d 57, 45 St. Rep. 1344 (1988), but see Harrison v. Chance, 244 M 215, 797 P2d 200, 47 St. Rep. 1539 (1990), in which the Supreme Court found that the 1987 amendment to 49-2-509 (now repealed) demonstrated a clear intent to legislatively overrule Drinkwalter and to allow the Commission for Human Rights to provide the exclusive remedy for discrimination in employment, including sexual harassment.

Mandatory Teacher Retirement Impliedly Repealed: In accordance with 20-4-203, the plaintiff, a tenured elementary school principal, received notification that because she was 65 years of age her contract would not be renewed. Because 20-4-203 permitted discrimination based solely on age with no qualifications or justifications bringing it within the limited exceptions of Title 49 and because the mandatory retirement provision bore no relationship to job performance, it was impliedly repealed by the adoption of 49-2-303 and 49-3-201. Dolan v. School District, 195 M 340, 636 P2d 825, 38 St. Rep. 1903 (1981), followed in Kenny v. Bd. of Trustees, 563 F. Supp. 95, 39 St. Rep. 1377 (D.C. Mont. 1982), and distinguished in Ross v. Great Falls, 1998 MT 276, 291 M 377, 967 P2d 1103, 55 St. Rep. 1127 (1998).

Attorney General's Opinions

Prescription Contraceptives and Related Medical Services Covered Under Employee Benefit Plan Pursuant to Human Rights Act: If an employee benefit plan provides prescription drug coverage and other medical services, this section requires inclusion of coverage for prescription contraceptives and related medical services. 51 A.G. Op. 16 (2006).

Applicability of Montana Human Rights Act to Employment in School Districts Located on Indian Reservations: Although applicability of the Montana Human Rights Act to reservation-related activities must be decided on a case-by-case basis, the Act does apply to public school districts lying wholly or partially within Indian reservations on district-owned lands and prohibits the school district from granting employment preferences to Indians unless specifically required by federal statute. Indian tribes do not have a federally protected interest in requiring that employment preferences be granted to their members or to other Indians. (See 1991 amendment.) 43 A.G. Op. 42 (1989).

Application of Nepotism Law to Rehiring of Tenured Teacher: The nepotism statutes (2-2-301 through 2-2-304) prohibit the rehiring of a tenured teacher if the teacher is within one of the prohibited relationships to a member of the school district board of trustees. The 1985 amendments of 49-2-303(3) and 49-3-201(5) overruled 39 A.G. Op. 67 (1982), insofar as it holds that the nepotism law does not apply to relationships by affinity. 41 A.G. Op. 57 (1986). (But see 1987 amendment to 2-2-302.)

Impliedly Repealed Nepotism Statute Not Revived by 1983 Amendments: The Attorney General issued an opinion (39 A.G. Op. 67 (1982)) that 2-2-302 had been impliedly repealed by the Human Rights Act. The 1983 amendments to the Human Rights Act and the Governmental Code of Fair Practices (which amendments permit assertion of the "reasonable demands" or "bona fide occupational qualification" defense to marital status discrimination) did not revive the impliedly repealed portion of 2-2-302 restricting employment on the basis of affinity. 40 A.G. Op. 40 (1984).

Nepotism Statute Subservient to Human Rights Law: The nepotism law clearly violates the intent of the human rights law because it permits discrimination in employment based solely on marital status. Applying the rule of construction that when two laws are in conflict, the later one supersedes the earlier, the human rights law must prevail. Thus, the Human Rights Act prohibits the Board of Trustees of a school district from enforcing the nepotism statute by refusing employment to a teacher solely on the basis of her relationship by affinity to a board member. 39 A.G. Op. 67 (1982), overruled by 1985 amendment of this section, as declared by 41 A.G. Op. 57 (1986) (see also 1987 amendment to 2-2-302).

49-2-304. Discrimination in public accommodations.

Compiler's Comments

1993 Amendment: Chapter 407 throughout section substituted "disability" for "handicap".

1991 Amendment: In (1)(a), (1)(b), and (2), after "sex", inserted "marital status".

Preamble: The preamble attached to Ch. 454, L. 1991, provided: "WHEREAS, Article II, section 4, of the Montana Constitution prohibits discrimination by the state or any person, firm, corporation, or institution against any person on account of social condition; and

WHEREAS, the Legislature has previously defined social condition to include marital status; and

WHEREAS, an individual may be subjected to discrimination because of marital status in the enjoyment of public accommodations and access to housing.

THEREFORE, it is appropriate for the Legislature to prohibit such discrimination."

1989 Amendments: Chapter 3 inserted (3) permitting public accommodations to provide special treatment of persons based on age; and made minor changes in form.

Chapter 543 inserted (2) prohibiting discrimination by alcoholic beverage licensees other than fraternal lodges; and made minor changes in form. Amendment effective April 14, 1989.

Severability: Section 5, Ch. 543, L. 1989, was a severability clause.

Case Notes

Plaintiff's Failure to File Accurate Complaint Not Detrimental — Defendant Had Notice of Nature of Claim: A tenant filed a complaint with the Human Rights Commission alleging that her landlord committed sexual harassment under the public accommodations provision in 49-2-304. The Commission determined that 49-2-304 was inapplicable, as the rental property was private property, but it allowed the tenant to pursue a claim based on the real estate transaction provision in 49-2-305. The landlord then petitioned the District Court for judicial review, reasoning that his due process rights would be violated if the tenant was allowed to pursue a claim under 49-2-305. The District Court agreed with the landlord and reversed the Commission, but the Supreme Court, in turn, reversed the District Court and determined that while the tenant could have been clearer in asserting a claim under 49-2-305, the landlord had sufficient notice of the nature of the claim and no evidence was presented showing that the landlord would have presented any additional evidence in a 49-2-305 defense. Bates v. Neva, 2013 MT 246, 371 Mont. 466, 308 P.3d 114.

Attorney With Potential Clients With Disabilities Not Aggrieved Party — No Standing to Assert Public Accommodations Discrimination Claim: The respondent, an attorney who rented office space in a building managed by the petitioner, brought a public accommodations discrimination claim against the petitioner, arguing that the petitioner had blocked public access to the only elevator in the building, making the respondent's second-floor law office inaccessible for clients with disabilities. The Supreme Court dismissed the respondent's claim, holding that he lacked standing to bring the claim. The court held that the respondent's intention to open a discrimination law practice for unknown potential clients was not a specific personal and legal interest sufficient to qualify him as an aggrieved person under the Montana Human Rights Act (MHRA). While the MHRA prohibits discrimination in public accommodations, a plaintiff is generally limited to asserting his own legal rights and interests; in this case, the respondent's claim was based on his potential future clients' access to his office, rather than his own access, and was therefore insufficient to establish standing. Baxter Homeowners Ass'n, Inc. v. Angel, 2013 MT 83, 369 Mont. 398, 298 P.3d 1145, following Williamson v. Mont. Pub. Serv. Comm'n, 2012 MT 32, 364 Mont. 128, 272 P.3d 71.

Questioning Only Validity of Statute for First Time in District Court — Other Issues to Be Raised at Administrative Level: The Commission for Human Rights enjoined the Hilands Golf Club (Hilands) from engaging in future gender discrimination, ordered Hilands to create a three-person committee to review its policies and practices, required the promotion of greater numbers of female members, and ordered Hilands to pay Ashmore $750 in damages for emotional distress. Hilands petitioned for judicial review, and the Supreme Court denied a challenge to the validity of Hilands' appeal in Hilands Golf Club v. Ashmore, 277 M 324, 922 P2d 469 (1996). Following remand, Hilands moved to dismiss based on its contention that Ashmore lacked standing and that the claim was moot, and the District Court granted Hilands' motion. Ashmore appealed, contending that Hilands knew the facts that gave rise to its standing and mootness claims prior to the contested case hearing, but waived those arguments by not raising them at the administrative level. Hilands maintained that because both standing and mootness are jurisdictional issues, they can be raised at any stage of the proceedings. The Supreme Court noted that a District Court's authority to review administrative rulings is constrained by statute. A plain reading of 2-4-702(1)(b) indicates that a party may question the validity of a statute for the first time on judicial review to the District Court, but other than that exception, all other issues must be raised at the administrative level absent good cause. Because the Legislature created judicial review of administrative decisions and at the same time limited the scope of review, the general rule that justiciability questions can be raised at any time does not apply in these circumstances. Therefore, standing and mootness questions cannot be raised for the first time on judicial review of an administrative decision unless the District Court determines that there was good cause for the party's failure to raise the questions before the agency. Here, Hilands knew that the claims were viable issues that could be raised before the Commission, yet Hilands failed to raise them. If some event had occurred after the administrative hearing that raised the issues, Hilands would presumably be able to show good cause for failure to raise the issues, but the good cause exception did not exist here. Thus, the District Court erred in granting the motion to dismiss, and the Supreme Court remanded for further consideration of any substantive issues raised in the petition for judicial review. Hilands Golf Club v. Ashmore, 2002 MT 8, 308 M 111, 39 P3d 697 (2002), following Lincoln County v. Sanders County, 261 M 344, 862 P2d 1133 (1993), and distinguishing Shamrock Motors, Inc. v. Ford Motor Co., 1999 MT 21, 293 M 188, 974 P2d 1154 (1999), and Shamrock Motors, Inc. v. Chrysler Corp., 1999 MT 39, 293 M 317, 974 P2d 1154 (1999).

Petition for Judicial Review of Contested Case — Service on Parties Under Former Rule 5(b) Held Sufficient: Ashmore brought a claim before the Human Rights Commission, alleging that she had been discriminated against by Hilands Golf Club because of her gender, in violation of this section. The Commission found in favor of Ashmore and awarded her relief. Hilands filed a petition for judicial review pursuant to 2-4-702 and served copies of the petition by mail upon counsel for the Commission and Hilands. No summons was served with the petition, and no service was made upon the Attorney General. Ashmore filed a motion to dismiss under former Rule 12(b), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), alleging that no jurisdiction had been obtained over the Commission by service of a summons upon the Attorney General, contrary to the holding in Fife v. Martin, 261 M 471, 863 P2d 403 (1993). The District Court granted the motion. The Supreme Court reversed, overruling Fife and holding that because judicial review pursuant to 2-4-702 is in the nature of an appeal, in which jurisdiction over the parties has already been established, service of a summons with the petition is unnecessary and holding that the petition may be served upon the parties by mail under former Rule 5(b), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded). The Supreme Court noted that it was sufficient to mail a copy of the petition upon the parties and the agency, whether or not the agency had been a party to the administrative proceeding. Hilands Golf Club v. Ashmore, 277 M 324, 922 P2d 469, 53 St. Rep. 664 (1996), followed in Forsythe v. Great Falls Holdings, LLC, 2008 MT 384, 347 M 67, 196 P3d 1233 (2008).

Preamble: The preamble attached to Ch. 328, L. 1991, provided: "WHEREAS, section 49-2-305, MCA, of the Human Rights Act prohibits discrimination in housing; and

WHEREAS, that section exempts "housing for older persons" from the prohibitions against discrimination in housing based upon age and familial status; and

WHEREAS, the definition of "housing for older persons" refers to 42 U.S.C. 3605(b)(2)(C) and (3) of the federal Fair Housing Act; and

WHEREAS, this citation is incorrect and should read 42 U.S.C. 3607(b)(2)(C) and (3), which define "housing for older persons" under federal law.

THEREFORE, it is appropriate for the Legislature to amend section 49-2-305, MCA, to correct this citation error."

Preamble: The preamble attached to Ch. 454, L. 1991, provided: "WHEREAS, Article II, section 4, of the Montana Constitution prohibits discrimination by the state or any person, firm, corporation, or institution against any person on account of social condition; and

WHEREAS, the Legislature has previously defined social condition to include marital status; and

WHEREAS, an individual may be subjected to discrimination because of marital status in the enjoyment of public accommodations and access to housing.

THEREFORE, it is appropriate for the Legislature to prohibit such discrimination."

Preamble: The preamble attached to Ch. 801, L. 1991, provided: "WHEREAS, the Legislature has previously included housing discrimination as a subject of discrimination law in the Montana Human Rights Act; and

WHEREAS, the housing discrimination laws in the Montana Human Rights Act were modeled after the federal Fair Housing Act of 1968; and

WHEREAS, in 1988, Congress substantially amended the federal Fair Housing Act, enforced by the Department of Housing and Urban Development; and

WHEREAS, the Montana Commission for Human Rights processes housing discrimination complaints in Montana that allege a violation of both the Montana Human Rights Act and the federal Fair Housing Act; and

WHEREAS, the Montana Commission for Human Rights receives a substantial portion of its funding from contracts with the Department of Housing and Urban Development for processing federal housing discrimination cases; and

WHEREAS, after January 13, 1992, the Department of Housing and Urban Development will no longer contract with any state fair housing agency that does not enforce a state law providing rights and remedies substantially equivalent to those provided by the federal Fair Housing Act; and

WHEREAS, the rights and remedies provided by the Montana Human Rights Act are not presently substantially equivalent to those provided by the federal Fair Housing Act.

THEREFORE, it is appropriate for the Legislature to amend the housing discrimination laws in the Montana Human Rights Act to maintain substantial equivalency with the federal Fair Housing Act."

Retroactive Applicability: Section 2, Ch. 328, L. 1991, provided: "[This act] applies retroactively, within the meaning of 1-2-109, to causes of action arising on or after October 1, 1989."

1989 Amendment: In (1)(a), (1)(b), and (1)(d), after "age", inserted "familial status"; inserted (4) exempting particular housing for older persons from prohibitions against age and familial status discrimination provisions; inserted (5) extending exemption from prohibition against age and familial status discrimination provisions to certain rooms or units where owner is in residence; and inserted (6) defining familial status.

Preamble: The preamble to Ch. 503, L. 1989, provided: "WHEREAS, Article II, section 4, of the Montana Constitution prohibits discrimination by the state or any person, firm, corporation, or institution against any person on account of social condition; and

WHEREAS, Article II, section 15, of the Montana Constitution confers upon children the same rights as those conferred upon adults, with the exception of rights precluded by laws that enhance the protection of persons under 18 years of age; and

WHEREAS, persons or families with children have been denied housing opportunities for reasons unrelated to public safety, public health, or the protection of children.

THEREFORE, it is appropriate that the Legislature enact a law to enhance the protection of children by prohibiting the denial of housing to persons or families with children."

1981 Amendment: Inserted subsection (1)(d) making an unlawful discriminatory practice the refusal to negotiate a sale or to make a housing accommodation property unavailable because of sex, race, creed, religion, age, physical or mental handicap, color, or national origin; substituted "subsection (1)" for "this section" at the end of (2); added subsection (3) providing that the making, printing, or publishing of a notice, statement, or advertisement indicating a preference, limitation, or discrimination in housing is an unlawful discriminatory practice.

Plaintiff's Failure to File Accurate Complaint Not Detrimental — Defendant Had Notice of Nature of Claim: A tenant filed a complaint with the Human Rights Commission alleging that her landlord committed sexual harassment under the public accommodations provision in 49-2-304. The Commission determined that 49-2-304 was inapplicable, as the rental property was private property, but it allowed the tenant to pursue a claim based on the real estate transaction provision in 49-2-305. The landlord then petitioned the District Court for judicial review, reasoning that his due process rights would be violated if the tenant was allowed to pursue a claim under 49-2-305. The District Court agreed with the landlord and reversed the Commission, but the Supreme Court, in turn, reversed the District Court and determined that while the tenant could have been clearer in asserting a claim under 49-2-305, the landlord had sufficient notice of the nature of the claim and no evidence was presented showing that the landlord would have presented any additional evidence in a 49-2-305 defense. Bates v. Neva, 2013 MT 246, 371 Mont. 466, 308 P.3d 114.

Housing Discrimination — Recovery Under Section 1982: Plaintiffs, who were denied rental units because they were African-American, were entitled to compensatory damages for emotional distress in view of overt discrimination against them by the rental unit owners and of plaintiffs' testimony that they suffered emotional distress as a result. Evidence of economic loss or medical evidence of mental or physical symptoms stemming from humiliation need not be submitted to support an award for compensatory damages for humiliation and emotional distress under section 1982. Johnson v. Hale, 940 F2d 1192 (9th Cir. 1991). The District Court damage award of $125 to tenants was reversed as insufficient in Johnson v. Hale, 13 F3d 1351 (9th Cir. 1994).

Complaint of School Use of Indian Mascots — Montana Commission for Human Rights Proper Forum for Claim of Unlawful Discrimination: Dupuis brought a discrimination claim against a reservation school district for using mascots allegedly degrading to Indian students. Without ruling on whether the use of the mascots was degrading, the Supreme Court held that Dupuis's remedy for a human dignity and racial discrimination case was to bring a claim before the Montana Commission for Human Rights before bringing an action in District Court. Failure to exhaust administrative remedies precluded the Supreme Court's consideration of the discrimination claims. Dupuis v. Ronan School District No. 30, 2006 MT 3, 330 M 232, 128 P3d 1010 (2006).

Exhaustion of Remedies Under Individuals With Disabilities Act Not Required Upon Claim of Discrimination in Public Education Under Human Rights Act: Amanda Johnson suffered from Campomelic Syndrome and as a result was confined to a wheelchair. Prior to Amanda's enrollment at Great Falls High School, her family brought Amanda's access issues to the attention of the Great Falls School District. There was no elevator in the school, which precluded Amanda's access to second-floor classrooms and science labs. There were numerous other physical barriers as well, such as parking problems, snow-covered sidewalks, cafeteria restrictions, heavy doors, office countertops that were too high, and inaccessibility to restrooms, water fountains, vending machines, and public telephones. The district determined that it could not build an elevator and continue to provide educational services to the rest of the student body; however, the district did prepare individualized education programs for Amanda each year that attempted to accommodate her by scheduling her classes on the first floor, transporting her to another high school for science labs, fitting desks for her and providing special seating, making minor physical adjustments to the building, providing a parking space for her in the faculty lot, attempting to coordinate snow removal with her arrival, and assigning a staff member to help her use the cafeteria. Nevertheless, her family was dissatisfied with the district's efforts and brought an education discrimination claim, alleging that the district illegally discriminated against Amanda by failing to provide an accessible building in violation of Title 49, ch. 2, commonly known as the Montana Human Rights Act (MHRA), and specifically 49-2-308 and this section. A hearings examiner found that Amanda did have far less access to the school than her classmates, but concluded that the district had provided reasonable access in light of the resources available to meet Amanda's needs. The hearings examiner ordered the district to proactively monitor accommodations provided to students with physical disabilities and to take a number of steps to minimize the likelihood of future violations of the MHRA. The Commission for Human Rights adopted the hearings examiner's findings and conclusions, and the district filed for judicial review, arguing to the District Court that: (1) the Commission lacked jurisdiction to consider the complaint until Amanda exhausted the administrative remedies under the Individuals With Disabilities Education Act (IDEA) through the Office of Public Instruction; and (2) the relief granted exceeded the Commission's statutory authority. The District Court agreed and overruled the Commission's order, and the issues were appealed to the Supreme Court. On the first issue, the Supreme Court found that the gravamen of Amanda's claim was grounded in discrimination under the MHRA, not the right to a free appropriate public education under the IDEA. Disabled students can receive an appropriate education, as attested by Amanda's 3.7 grade point average, and still suffer discrimination when the physical premises of a school deprive them of basic human dignities. When claims involve the simple application of the IDEA exhaustion doctrine in the absence of a parallel state statutory remedy, the logic of the IDEA exhaustion may apply, but when, as here, state human rights laws provide an administrative remedy through the Commission for Human Rights, there is no compelling reason to preclude the MHRA claim by first requiring the IDEA exhaustion. The court found no legal basis for determining that the IDEA was intended to limit applicable state human rights discrimination claims. Thus, Amanda's claim could proceed prior to exhaustion of or without ever invoking the IDEA administrative remedies, and the District Court erred in holding otherwise. On the second issue, the Supreme Court found that the remedy ordered by the Commission—requiring the district to formalize its policy and procedure for addressing the special needs of disabled students—fell within the authority of 49-2-506 and was reasonable in light of the relief requested. The District Court was reversed, and the Commission's order was reinstated. Great Falls Pub. Schools v. Johnson, 2001 MT 95, 305 M 200, 26 P3d 734 (2001), following Harrison v. Chance, 244 M 215, 797 P2d 200 (1990), and Shields v. Helena School District No. 1, 284 M 138, 943 P2d 999 (1997), and distinguishing Koopman v. Freemont County School District No. 1, 911 P2d 1049 (Wyo. 1996).

IDEA Complaint Held Subject to Exhaustion of Administrative Remedies Under Montana Human Rights Act: The Shieldses brought a civil action under 42 U.S.C. 1983 to enforce the rights of their son under the Individuals With Disabilities Education Act (IDEA) after he was excluded from a ski trip. The Shieldses had previously filed a grievance with the school, appealed the result of the grievance to the Superintendent of the Helena School District, and appealed the Superintendent's decision to the trustees of the School District. The District Court dismissed the section 1983 action, holding that the Shieldses failed to first file a complaint with the Human Rights Commission and thereby failed to exhaust their administrative remedies. The Shieldses argued that their case was a state tort action and did not fall within the jurisdiction of the Commission under Title 49, ch. 2, commonly known as the Montana Human Rights Act. Citing Harrison v. Chance, 244 M 215, 797 P2d 200 (1990), the Supreme Court held that because the gravamen of the complaint was discrimination, the complaint fell under the Montana Human Rights Act and that the Shieldses were therefore required to file a written, verified complaint with the Commission. The Supreme Court held that only after exhausting that procedure could they then bring a complaint in District Court. Shields v. Helena School District No. 1, 284 M 138, 943 P2d 999, 54 St. Rep. 815 (1997).

Plaintiff Subject to McDonnell Douglas Test to Prove Employment Discrimination: Ray argued that his position as department head at Montana Tech of the University of Montana was not renewed because of his environmental activities and criticism of engineering students and also because of his marital status because one of the administrators was opposed to his being married to another member of the faculty. The Commission for Human Rights determined that the university had presented legitimate reasons for the nonrenewal and found for the school. The decision was upheld by the District Court. On appeal, Ray asserted that he was not subject to the McDonnell Douglas test adopted by the Montana Supreme Court in Martinez v. Yellowstone County Welfare Dept., 192 M 42, 626 P2d 242 (1981). The Supreme Court found that Ray had not presented any direct evidence that he was discriminated against based upon his political beliefs or marital status and therefore was subject to the test that provides that a plaintiff, relying on circumstantial evidence, has the initial burden of proving a prima facie case of discrimination. However, if the other party then meets its burden of rebutting the prima facie case, the burden reverts to the plaintiff. The Supreme Court agreed with the Commission for Human Rights that Ray had met the initial burden. However, the Supreme Court ruled that Montana Tech had then met its burden of showing legitimate reasons for the nonrenewal, which were supported by substantial credible evidence. The Supreme Court upheld the Commission's and District Court's findings that Montana Tech had presented reasons for the nonrenewal that were not pretextual, and that shifted the burden back to Ray who had not presented any convincing evidence that the reasons given for the nonrenewal were pretextual. Ray v. Mont. Tech of the Univ. of Mont., 2007 MT 21, 335 M 367, 152 P3d 122 (2007).

Assignment of Particular Work Position Not Considered Marital or Sex-Plus Discrimination: Three temporary seasonal positions at the Department of Natural Resources and Conservation (DNRC) were eliminated, including Beaver's position, and three permanent seasonal positions were created, including two 8-month positions and one 6-month position. Beaver was given the 6-month position and later sued DNRC for marital and sex-plus discrimination, based in part on the comment by a supervisor that Beaver did not have to worry about getting the 6-month position because she had recently been married and now had a new husband to support her. DNRC contended that the positions were offered based on experience and training, and it was within the discretion of the District Court to determine the credibility of the witnesses and testimony. Although agreeing that the supervisor's statement was highly inappropriate, the Supreme Court nevertheless held that based on the evidence, the employment decision did not involve marital or sex-plus discrimination and that DNRC did not discriminate against Beaver based on marital status. Beaver v. Dept. of Natural Resources and Conservation, 2003 MT 287, 318 M 35, 78 P3d 857 (2003).

Freemont County School District No. 1, 911 P2d 1049 (Wyo. 1996).

Employment Rights Inapplicable to State Prison Inmates: Plaintiffs maintained that while they were male inmates at the state prison, they were employed in various capacities and paid wages substantially less than were paid female inmates for essentially the same jobs. They requested damages, claiming that as male prisoners they were economically discriminated against in favor of female prisoners. They also asked the District Court to describe conditions of work that would alleviate this sexual discrimination in the state prison system. However, the legislature specifically prohibited plaintiffs from receiving the relief they sought by providing that one of the penalties for being a prison inmate is that a prisoner does not have employment rights while serving a sentence in the state prison. The Supreme Court affirmed, holding the plaintiffs were precluded from recovering under both the sex discrimination statutes and the Fair Labor Standards Act. Quigg v. South, 245 M 438, 793 P2d 831, 47 St. Rep. 1176 (1990). See also Worsley v. Lash, 421 F.Supp. 556 (N.D. Ind. 1976).

Employment Discrimination Based on Political Beliefs: The Department of Social and Rehabilitation Services (now Department of Public Health and Human Services) did not hire plaintiff because of her support for certain legislation pending before the Legislature. The Supreme Court cited Pickering v. Bd. of Educ., 391 US 563, 20 L Ed 2d 811, 88 S Ct 1731 (1968), in holding that a public employee does not relinquish his first amendment right to comment on matters of public interest by virtue of government employment. Plaintiff's support of proposed legislation was a matter of public concern as to how government should be conducted and thus was an expression of her political ideas or beliefs. Failure to hire her because of those ideas or beliefs constituted illegal discrimination. Taliaferro v. Dept. of Social and Rehabilitation Services, 235 M 23, 764 P2d 860, 45 St. Rep. 2131 (1988).

Municipal Authority to Set Water and Sewer Service Rates — Applicability of Human Rights Act to Setting of Water and Sewer Rates: A provision in 7-13-4304 provides that the rates for municipal water and sewer charges may be fixed in advance and must be uniform for like services in all parts of the municipality. The city of Bozeman sought to provide discounts or preferential rates to senior citizens on water and wastewater charges. The question was whether the senior rates violated the statutory requirement for uniform or equitable rates. The Attorney General held that because water and sewer ratemaking is not an area affirmatively subject to state control, a local government with self-government powers may set rates for those services without regard to the requirements of 7-13-4304. However, the Attorney General noted that age discrimination does violate this chapter, commonly known as the Montana Human Rights Act, that Bozeman is subject to the Act despite its status as a self-governing municipality, and that discrimination in government services is affirmatively subject to state control. Without deciding whether Bozeman's proposed ordinance would meet the standard of strict construction of reasonable grounds based on age, the Attorney General nevertheless concluded that this section of the Act did apply to the Bozeman ordinance setting senior rates for municipal water and sewer services. 50 A.G. Op. 10 (2004).

Age Limitation for Certification Repealed by Implication: The age limitation established in 20-4-104(1)(a) as a qualification for certification to teach is repealed by implication by 49-2-308 and 49-3-204. Age alone is not reasonable grounds to deny a teaching certificate to an otherwise qualified teacher. Based on the holding in Dolan v. School District, 195 M 340, 636 P2d 825, 38 St. Rep. 1903 (1981), 20-4-104(1)(a) is impliedly repealed by the Human Rights Act. 39 A.G. Op. 54 (1982).

2009 Amendment: Chapter 56 made section gender neutral; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective October 1, 2009.

1983 Amendment: Deleted former (4), which read: "retaliate against any employee who files a complaint with the commissioner under the provisions of this part".

Functions Transferred: Chapter 285, L. 1983, repealed 39-7-201, 39-7-202, and 39-7-205 through 39-7-209; renumbered 39-7-203 and 39-7-204 as 49-2-310 and 49-2-311 after amending 39-7-203; transferred the maternity leave functions of the Commissioner of Labor and Industry to the Commission for Human Rights; and provided that Ch. 285 does not affect any complaints filed with the Commissioner of Labor and Industry under Title 39, ch. 7, part 2, prior to July 1, 1983, the effective date of Ch. 285. The repealed sections are procedural provisions implementing 39-7-203 and 39-7-204 and are unnecessary in view of the similar procedure in this chapter, to which those sections were renumbered.

Case Notes

Montana Maternity Leave Act — Not Preempted by Federal Law: Female employee who was discharged from her employment because of her pregnancy sought back wages and penalties. Employer claimed its no-leave policy for employees with less than 1 year with the company was facially neutral because it applied to both sexes and sought a judicial determination that the Montana Maternity Leave Act (MMLA) is invalid because it is preempted by Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 and the federal Pregnancy Discrimination Act (PDA). The District Court held the MMLA invalid. The Supreme Court reversed the District Court decision and held that the employer's no-leave policy clearly violated the Montana law and that the employee was entitled to backpay and penalties for her wrongful discharge. The Supreme Court stated that the employer's no-leave policy created a disparate effect on women who become pregnant compared to men who do not become pregnant. Although the policy was facially neutral, it nonetheless subjected pregnant women to job termination on a basis not faced by men. The no-leave policy therefore appears to be gender-based discrimination by an employer in violation of Title VII and the PDA. The Supreme Court stated that the MMLA is consonant with Title VII and the PDA and is not preempted by either. Miller-Wohl Co., Inc. v. Comm'r of Labor & Industry, 214 M 238, 692 P2d 1243, 41 St. Rep. 2445 (1984); on appeal to the U.S. Supreme Court, judgment vacated and case remanded, 479 US 1048, 93 L Ed 2d 972, 107 S Ct 919 (1987); judgment reinstated and remanded to the District Court for determination of appropriate attorney fees and costs, 228 M 505, 744 P2d 871, 44 St. Rep. 1718 (1987).

"Disability as a Result of Pregnancy" — Application to Normal Pregnancy: "Disability as a result of pregnancy" applies to disabilities resulting from normal as well as abnormal pregnancies, and the period of coverage extends from onset of actual disability through termination of gestation and a reasonable period of recovery, to be determined by competent medical authority. Mtn. States Tel. & Tel. Co. v. Comm'r of Labor & Indus., 187 M 22, 608 P2d 1047, 36 St. Rep. 1844 (1979).

Federal Preemption Theory Rejected: The Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974, 29 U.S.C. §1001, et seq., the Labor Management Relations Act of 1947, as amended, 29 U.S.C. §141, et seq., and the National Labor Relations Act, 29 U.S.C. §151, et seq., do not preempt the application of subsection (3) of this section to the Mountain States Telephone and Telegraph Company. To hold otherwise would create an enormous vacuum in areas that have heretofore been traditionally dealt with by the states through the liberal intent of Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964. Mtn. States Tel. & Tel. Co. v. Comm'r of Labor & Indus., 187 M 22, 608 P2d 1047, 36 St. Rep. 1844 (1979).

Municipal Authority to Set Water and Sewer Service Rates — Applicability of Human Rights Act to Setting of Water and Sewer Rates: A provision in 7-13-4304 provides that the rates for municipal water and sewer charges may be fixed in advance and must be uniform for like services in all parts of the municipality. The city of Bozeman sought to provide discounts or preferential rates to senior citizens on water and wastewater charges. The question was whether the senior rates violated the statutory requirement for uniform or equitable rates. The Attorney General held that because water and sewer ratemaking is not an area affirmatively subject to state control, a local government with self-government powers may set rates for those services without regard to the requirements of 7-13-4304. However, the Attorney General noted that age discrimination does violate this chapter, commonly known as the Montana Human Rights Act, that Bozeman is subject to the Act despite its status as a self-governing municipality, and that discrimination in government services is affirmatively subject to state control. Without deciding whether Bozeman's proposed ordinance would meet the standard of strict construction of reasonable grounds based on age, the Attorney General nevertheless concluded that 49-2-308 of the Act did apply to the Bozeman ordinance setting senior rates for municipal water and sewer services. 50 A.G. 1993 Amendments: Chapter 13 near beginning revised subsection reference to include 49-2-303(5). Amendment effective February 1, 1993.

Chapter 407 throughout section substituted "disability" for "handicap".

1991 Amendment: In (1) inserted reference to subsection (4) of 49-2-303 and after "justification for discrimination" substituted "except" for "unless the nature of the service requires the discrimination".

Applicability: Section 7, Ch. 506, L. 1991, provided: "[This act] applies to hiring for vacancies in state agency or state construction project positions within an Indian reservation that occur after [the effective date of this act] [effective October 1, 1991]."

1985 Amendment: At beginning inserted exception clause permitting compliance with state antinepotism statutes as proper justification for discrimination.

Attorney General's Opinions

Applicability of Montana Human Rights Act to Employment in School Districts Located on Indian Reservations: Although applicability of the Montana Human Rights Act to reservation-related activities must be decided on a case-by-case basis, the Act does apply to public school districts lying wholly or partially within Indian reservations on district-owned lands and prohibits the school district from granting employment preferences to Indians unless specifically required by federal statute. Indian tribes do not have a federally protected interest in requiring that employment preferences be granted to their members or to other Indians. (See 1991 amendment.) 43 A.G. Op. 42 (1989).

Human Rights Complaint — Gravamen Test No Longer Applicable: The plain language of the Montana Human Rights Act, Title 49, ch. 2, after its 2007 amendments, states that a charging party may file a complaint in District Court once the Human Rights Bureau dismisses a complaint as long as the party complies with 49-2-511. Thus it is no longer necessary to apply a "gravamen" analysis when determining whether a suit may be filed in District Court following the notice of dismissal. A "gravamen" analysis may still be proper in a claim alleging discrimination that is filed in District Court without first filing a claim before the Human Rights Bureau and receiving a notice of dismissal. Griffith v. Butte School Dist. No. 1, 2010 MT 246, 358 Mont. 193, 244 P.3d 321.

Nonconsensual Sex Not Considered Sexual Harassment for Purposes of Employment Discrimination: Nonconsensual sex goes beyond any reasonable conception of sexual harassment and falls outside the definition of discrimination in employment in this chapter, commonly known as the Montana Human Rights Act. Allegations of nonconsensual sex sound in tort, not in discrimination. Saucier v. McDonald's Restaurants of Mont., 2008 MT 63, 342 M 29, 179 P3d 481 (2008).

Pursuit of Discrimination or Tort Claim Based on Gravamen of Complaint: In determining whether a claimant has stated a tort claim or a discrimination claim, the Supreme Court looks to the gravamen of the complaint. When the gravamen is ascertained, the complaint is designated as either a tort action or a discrimination action. If the alleged conduct falls outside the definition of unlawful discrimination in this chapter, commonly known as the Montana Human Rights Act (MHRA), a plaintiff may maintain a tort action. However, because the MHRA establishes the exclusive means of legal redress for unlawful discrimination, the plaintiff may not simultaneously proceed in District Court with a discrimination claim based on the same allegations when it is determined that the complaint sounds in tort. Saucier v. McDonald's Restaurants of Mont., 2008 MT 63, 342 M 29, 179 P3d 481 (2008), distinguished in Griffith v. Butte School Dist. No. 1, 2010 MT 246, 358 Mont. 193, 244 P.3d 321, after 2007 amendment of Montana Human Rights Act. See also Harrison v. Chance, 244 M 215, 797 P2d 200 (1990).

Dismissal of Complaint When Proceedings Not Concluded Within Twelve Months of Filing of Complaint Absent Stipulation to Extend Time for Hearing: If the parties to a discrimination case mutually agree to allow the Department of Labor and Industry to retain jurisdiction under this chapter for a period of time that exceeds 12 months after a complaint is filed, then the parties must stipulate to that agreement. If no stipulation occurs and proceedings are not concluded within 12 months after a complaint is filed, the complaint is subject to dismissal. Indian Health Bd. of Billings, Inc. v. Dept. of Labor and Industry, 2008 MT 48, 341 M 411, 177 P3d 1029 (2008).

Human Rights Act Exclusive Remedy for Sexual Discrimination Complaint — Summary Dismissal by District Court Affirmed: Arthur filed a sexual discrimination complaint with the Montana Commission for Human Rights but failed to rebut a defendant's response, so the Commission sent Arthur a notice of dismissal and right to file a civil action in District Court. Arthur filed neither a timely objection to dismissal nor a timely action in District Court. Instead, Arthur filed a tort action against defendants, alleging various torts and requesting compensatory and punitive damages. An amended complaint filed 2 years later asserted: (1) failure to provide a safe workplace; (2) negligent retention of the employee who allegedly sexually harassed Arthur; (3) negligent supervision of the employee; (4) intentional infliction of emotional distress; (5) negligent infliction of emotional distress; and (6) sexual harassment under this chapter, commonly known as the Montana Human Rights Act. The District Court summarily dismissed the first five complaints as barred by the exclusive remedy provision of 49-2-509 (now repealed) and dismissed the sixth complaint as barred by the statute of limitations in 49-2-509 (now repealed). On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. Arthur's tort claims were a recharacterization of the initial sexual harassment claim, and pursuant to 49-2-509 (now repealed), the Montana Human Rights Act is the exclusive remedy for claims of sexual discrimination and precludes other tort claims that arise from underlying allegations of sexual discrimination or harassment. Further, under Hash v. U.S. W. Communication Serv., 268 M 326, 886 P2d 442 (1994), equitable tolling of the statute of limitations is not applicable in a discrimination case when a claimant does not have more than one legal remedy available, any one of which could be pursued in good faith. Rather, the claimant's exclusive remedy is under the Montana Human Rights Act. Arthur had knowledge of the vital facts underlying the sexual discrimination claim and could not claim inability to obtain the information in order to toll the statute of limitations. Arthur v. Pierre Ltd., 2004 MT 303, 323 M 453, 100 P3d 987 (2004), following Harrison v. Chance, 244 M 215, 797 P2d 200 (1990), Bruner v. Yellowstone County, 272 M 261, 900 P2d 901 (1995), and Fandrich v. Capital Ford Lincoln Mercury, 272 M 425, 901 P2d 112 (1995).

Complaint Filed Prior to Amendment — Statutes of Limitations Met: Prior to amendment of 49-2-509 (now repealed) in 1987, the decision in Drinkwalter v. Shipton Supply Co., Inc., 225 M 380, 732 P2d 1335 (1987), allowed an individual alleging sexual harassment to file directly in District Court without first filing a complaint with the Human Rights Commission, in effect granting a victim of an alleged tort two legal remedies. The amendment effectively overruled Drinkwalter by mandating that this chapter, commonly known as the Montana Human Rights Act, was the sole and exclusive remedy for a sexual harassment cause of action. In this case, because the final alleged tort occurred on March 17, 1987, prior to the amendment, Harrison reasonably and in good faith pursued one of the two potential remedies, believing that the amended version of 49-2-509 (now repealed) either was inapplicable to her claims or, if applicable, would not apply because the alleged torts occurred prior to the effective date of the 1987 amendment. Harrison filed the complaint in District Court on September 28, 1987, well within the 3-year tort statute of limitations in 27-2-204 and also within the 180-day statute of limitations applicable to human rights cases that was triggered on the effective date of the amendment—April 16, 1987. Absent any evidence of prejudice by the delayed filing, equitable tolling, as discussed in Erickson v. Croft, 233 M 146, 760 P2d 706 (1988), was properly invoked and Harrison was entitled to a judgment as a matter of law. Chance v. Harrison, 272 M 52, 899 P2d 537, 52 St. Rep. 603 (1995), distinguishing Hash v. U.S. W. Communications Serv., 268 M 326, 886 P2d 442 (1994).

No Constitutional Right to Punitive Damages as Remedy for Discrimination: Fugate brought an action for sexual discrimination in employment before the Human Rights Commission. The Commission denied punitive damages. Citing Romero v. J.&J. Tire, 238 M 146, 777 P2d 292 (1989), the Supreme Court held that there is no constitutional right to an award of punitive damages. Moran v. Shotgun Willies, Inc., 270 M 47, 889 P2d 1185, 52 St. Rep. 71 (1995).

Exclusivity of Human Rights Act for Discrimination Claims — Doctrine of Equitable Tolling Inapplicable: The Legislature clearly intended that this chapter, commonly known as the Montana Human Rights Act, be the exclusive remedy for discrimination claims. To permit parties to delay filing with the Human Rights Commission until the filing time runs out and then to file directly in District Court would, in a sense, gut the Human Rights Act. Further, because the Act provides the exclusive remedy, the doctrine of equitable tolling, which applies when an injured person has several remedies and reasonably and in good faith pursues one, does not apply in discrimination cases when there is but one remedy. Hash v. U.S. W. Communications Serv., 268 M 326, 886 P2d 442, 51 St. Rep. 1404 (1994).

Sanctions at Hearing for Failure to Disclose: A ruling by the Human Rights Commission striking part of defendant's witnesses and exhibits was proper because of defendant's failure to disclose witnesses, exhibits, and documents relating to the stricken matters. Vainio v. Brookshire, 258 M 273, 852 P2d 596, 50 St. Rep. 529 (1993).

Commission as Exclusive Remedy for Discrimination in Employment — Retroactive Applicability: The 1987 amendment of 49-2-509 (now repealed) demonstrated a clear legislative intent to overrule Drinkwalter v. Shipton Supply Co., Inc., 225 M 380, 732 P2d 1335 (1987), and to allow the Commission for Human Rights to provide the exclusive remedy for discrimination in employment, including claims of sexual harassment. As set out in the applicability provisions of the 1987 law, the exclusive remedy provision applies to all cases pending on or filed after April 16, 1987, and may therefore be applied retroactively. Harrison v. Chance, 244 M 215, 797 P2d 200, 47 St. Rep. 1539 (1990), followed in Bruner v. Yellowstone County, 272 M 261, 900 P2d 901, 52 St. Rep. 699 (1995), and Fandrich v. Capital Ford Lincoln Mercury, 272 M 425, 901 P2d 112, 52 St. Rep. 806 (1995).

Delaying Access to Courts by Using Agency to Handle Racial Discrimination Complaints Not Unconstitutional: The defendant's suit in District Court alleging that his employment was terminated due to race was dismissed because by statute he was required to file his complaint with the Commission for Human Rights. The defendant filed an appeal, alleging that the requirement denied him due process and access to the courts. The Supreme Court held that the state's purpose of combating illegal discrimination was a rational basis for delaying access to the courts and therefore did not violate the federal or state constitution. Romero v. J&J Tire, 238 M 146, 777 P2d 292, 46 St. Rep. 1159 (1989).

Interpretation of Statutory Time Limits and Authority of Administrator: Section 49-2-509 (now repealed) provided that on request of either party, a right to sue letter should issue when 180 days have elapsed since the filing of the complaint without the completion of an informal settlement, and in addition, when 12 months have elapsed from the filing date so that a contested case hearing cannot be held within such 12-month period. Further, in determining when the 180-day period begins, 49-2-509 (now repealed) did not grant the Human Rights Commission administrator the authority or discretion to determine whether efforts at informal settlement have been successful. (See 1997 Amendment.) Univ. of Mont. Foundation v. Human Rights Comm'n, 223 M 389, 726 P2d 817, 43 St. Rep. 1814 (1986).

Discretion of Trial Court in Awarding Attorney Fees — Frivolous or Factually Baseless Claim of Discrimination: Under 49-2-509 (now repealed), reasonable attorney fees may be awarded to a prevailing party defendant in a suit alleging illegal discriminatory practices; however, it is in the trial court's discretion whether the suit successfully defended was frivolous or factually baseless. Absent such finding, the discretion of the trial court in denying defendant attorney fees will not be disturbed by the Supreme Court. Breese v. Steele Mtn. Enterprises, Inc., 220 M 454, 716 P2d 214, 43 St. Rep. 522 (1986).

Statutory Remedy Exclusive: The administrative remedy provided for victims of age discrimination by this part is exclusive. The purpose of the act forbidding discrimination was to eliminate discrimination in multiple respects, and to accomplish this, the Legislature did not authorize private suits. A private suit would not reveal the whole picture of discrimination that an inspection of the complaint by the Human Rights Commission could reveal. The purpose of a private suit is to get damage for an individual and not to eliminate discrimination by "conference, conciliation, and persuasion". If some relief other than a monetary award were to be granted in the private action, it would be a court and not a commission that would fashion the remedy and supervise its enforcement. Walker v. The Anaconda Co., 520 F. Supp. 1143, 38 St.

Rep. 1557 (D.C. Mont. 1981). (However, under the 1985 amendment to 49-2-508, "a party" may petition the District Court to enforce a Commission order if the order is not obeyed.)

Date of Requested Rehearing — Running of Judicial Review Period: The 30-day period under 2-4-702 began to run when the Human Rights Commission issued its final order, not when the Commission denied a requested rehearing, since the Commission has no rule allowing a rehearing. Bradco Supply Co. v. Larsen, 183 M 97, 598 P2d 596 (1979).

Venue for Action Against Commission: In an action for a Writ of Prohibition in which plaintiffs' petition alleged that their constitutional right against self-incrimination was being infringed by the Commission's investigatory activities in Gallatin County, the cause of action arose and venue lay in Gallatin County, not Lewis and Clark County, the "decision-making hub" of the Commission. Venue must be determined on the basis of the plaintiffs' allegations, which addressed the exercise of the Commission's powers and not the powers themselves. School Districts v. Human Rights Comm'n, 173 M 113, 566 P2d 799 (1977).

Case Notes

Plaintiff's Failure to File Accurate Complaint Not Detrimental — Defendant Had Notice of Nature of Claim: A tenant filed a complaint with the Human Rights Commission alleging that her landlord committed sexual harassment under the public accommodations provision in 49-2-304. The Commission determined that 49-2-304 was inapplicable, as the rental property was private property, but it allowed the tenant to pursue a claim based on the real estate transaction provision in 49-2-305. The landlord then petitioned the District Court for judicial review, reasoning that his due process rights would be violated if the tenant was allowed to pursue a claim under 49-2-305. The District Court agreed with the landlord and reversed the Commission, but the Supreme Court, in turn, reversed the District Court and determined that while the tenant could have been clearer in asserting a claim under 49-2-305, the landlord had sufficient notice of the nature of the claim and no evidence was presented showing that the landlord would have presented any additional evidence in a 49-2-305 defense. Bates v. Neva, 2013 MT 246, 371 Mont. 466, 308 P.3d 114.

Human Rights Complaint — Gravamen Test No Longer Applicable: The plain language of the Montana Human Rights Act, Title 49, ch. 2, after its 2007 amendments, states that a charging party may file a complaint in District Court once the Human Rights Bureau dismisses a complaint as long as the party complies with 49-2-511. Thus it is no longer necessary to apply a "gravamen" analysis when determining whether a suit may be filed in District Court following the notice of dismissal. A "gravamen" analysis may still be proper in a claim alleging discrimination that is filed in District Court without first filing a claim before the Human Rights Bureau and receiving a notice of dismissal. Griffith v. Butte School Dist. No. 1, 2010 MT 246, 358 Mont. 193, 244 P.3d 321.

Pursuit of Discrimination or Tort Claim Based on Gravamen of Complaint: In determining whether a claimant has stated a tort claim or a discrimination claim, the Supreme Court looks to the gravamen of the complaint. When the gravamen is ascertained, the complaint is designated as either a tort action or a discrimination action. If the alleged conduct falls outside the definition of unlawful discrimination in this chapter, commonly known as the Montana Human Rights Act (MHRA), a plaintiff may maintain a tort action. However, because the MHRA establishes the exclusive means of legal redress for unlawful discrimination, the plaintiff may not simultaneously proceed in District Court with a discrimination claim based on the same allegations when it is determined that the complaint sounds in tort. Full-Time Employment Wage Disparity Not Pleaded in Sex Discrimination Case — Improper Amendment of Pleadings by Hearings Examiner to Include Full-Time Employment Claim — Reversal of Commission Order Affirmed: Sprow brought an employment discrimination case, claiming that because of her sex, she was paid less than other employees at plaintiff's corporation. Sprow had started the job as a full-time employee, but received a pay decrease upon moving to part-time work, at which time she discovered the pay disparity between part-time employees and filed the claim. The hearings examiner reported that plaintiff had provided a legitimate nondiscriminatory reason for paying Sprow less as a part-time employee, but that Sprow had established that for full-time work, Sprow was as qualified as other workers. The hearings examiner concluded that plaintiff had discriminated against Sprow based on pay discrepancies in her full-time employment. In order to reach that conclusion, the hearings examiner amended the original pleadings, which only alleged discrimination regarding part-time employment. Plaintiff appealed to District Court, and the court reversed on grounds that the court had no jurisdiction to determine discrimination in full-time employment because Sprow's complaint concerned only part-time wage disparity. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. Sprow never pleaded wage disparity in full-time employment, the hearings examiner erred by inserting the issue into the pleadings, and the Commission for Human Rights erred by concluding that Sprow had alleged full-time wage disparity based on the improperly amended pleadings. The District Court properly reversed in favor of plaintiff. Centech Corp. v. Sprow, 2006 MT 27, 331 M 98, 128 P3d 1036 (2006).

Entirety of Hostile Work Environment Claim Actionable — Claim When Environment Continues to Time Within Statutory Limit Considered Timely: The entirety of a hostile work environment claim is actionable even though an employee may reasonably have realized that there was an actionable claim at an earlier date, as long as the hostile work environment continued to a point in time that lies within the statutory time limits for filing a claim. In the present case, the hostile work environment continued to a point within the 180-day statute of limitations in this section, and the District Court did not err in holding that the claim was timely filed. Benjamin v. Anderson, 2005 MT 123, 327 M 173, 112 P3d 1039 (2005), following Nat'l RR Passenger Corp. v. Morgan, 536 US 101 (2002).

Questioning Only Validity of Statute for First Time in District Court — Other Issues to Be Raised at Administrative Level: The Commission for Human Rights enjoined the Hilands Golf Club (Hilands) from engaging in future gender discrimination, ordered Hilands to create a three-person committee to review its policies and practices, required the promotion of greater numbers of female members, and ordered Hilands to pay Ashmore $750 in damages for emotional distress. Hilands petitioned for judicial review, and the Supreme Court denied a challenge to the validity of Hilands' appeal in Hilands Golf Club v. Ashmore, 277 M 324, 922 P2d 469 (1996). Following remand, Hilands moved to dismiss based on its contention that Ashmore lacked standing and that the claim was moot, and the District Court granted Hilands' motion. Ashmore appealed, contending that Hilands knew the facts that gave rise to its standing and mootness claims prior to the contested case hearing, but waived those arguments by not raising them at the administrative level. Hilands maintained that because both standing and mootness are jurisdictional issues, they can be raised at any stage of the proceedings. The Supreme Court noted that a District Court's authority to review administrative rulings is constrained by statute. A plain reading of 2-4-702(1)(b) indicates that a party may question the validity of a statute for the first time on judicial review to the District Court, but other than that exception, all other issues must be raised at the administrative level absent good cause. Because the Legislature created judicial review of administrative decisions and at the same time limited the scope of review, the general rule that justiciability questions can be raised at any time does not apply in these circumstances. Therefore, standing and mootness questions cannot be raised for the first time on judicial review of an administrative decision unless the District Court determines that there was good cause for the party's failure to raise the questions before the agency. Here, Hilands knew that the claims were viable issues that could be raised before the Commission, yet Hilands failed to raise them. If some event had occurred after the administrative hearing that raised the issues, Hilands would presumably be able to show good cause for failure to raise the issues, but the good cause exception did not exist here. Thus, the District Court erred in granting the motion to dismiss, and the Supreme Court remanded for further consideration of any substantive issues raised in the petition for judicial review. Hilands Golf Club v. Ashmore, 2002 MT 8, 308 M 111, 39 P3d 697 (2002), following Lincoln County v. Sanders County, 261 M 344, 862 P2d 1133 (1993), and distinguishing Shamrock Motors, Inc. v. Ford Motor Co., 1999 MT 21, 293 M 188, 974 P2d 1154 (1999), and Shamrock Motors, Inc. v. Chrysler Corp., 1999 MT 39, 293 M 317, 974 P2d 1154 (1999).

Improperly Working Commission for Human Rights Fax Machine Rendering Attempt to File Appeal Brief Untimely — Commission's Dismissal of Appeal Clearly Erroneous: Sprow contended that CenTech Corporation (CenTech) discriminated against her on the basis of gender, and filed a complaint with the Department of Labor and Industry. A contested case hearing was held, and the Department found in Sprow's favor. CenTech filed a timely notice of appeal with the Commission for Human Rights. The appeal brief was due May 15, 2000. CenTech attempted to fax the brief to the Commission on that date, but because of communication errors with the Commission's fax machine, only one page of the brief was received by the Commission. CenTech attempted to fax the brief again the next day, but again the fax equipment was not functioning. A CenTech representative contacted the Commission and was told that the communication error was likely due to the long-distance connection, so CenTech mailed the brief instead, but it was received 2 days after the filing deadline. Nevertheless, the Commission declined to consider CenTech's brief because it was considered untimely, and maintained that the Commission was not responsible for communication errors. CenTech appealed to District Court, and the court upheld the Commission's findings that numerous other faxes were received on May 15 and that the fax machine was working properly. The court concluded that by waiting until "almost literally the last minute" to file the brief, CenTech assumed the risk associated with the late filing and today's technology. CenTech appealed, and the Supreme Court reversed. Substantial evidence indicated that CenTech attempted to fax the entire brief within the allotted time but was prevented from doing so because of communication errors with the Commission's own fax machine. Thus, the District Court erred in holding that the Commission's findings and conclusions were not clearly erroneous in view of the reliable, probative, and substantial evidence on the record. Further, Commission regulations allow the suspension, waiver, or modification of its rules to prevent manifest injustice to a party, ensure a fair hearing, or afford substantial justice. Failure to do so in this case unreasonably elevated form over substance and prejudiced CenTech. CenTech did not have to assume the risk of a fax malfunction, and given its good faith effort to file the brief, justice required that its attempt be honored. CenTech Corp. v. Sprow, 2001 MT 298, 307 M 481, 38 P3d 812 (2001).

Failure to Timely File Discrimination Complaint With Commission — Prosecution in District Court Precluded: Skites filed a claim against her employer with the Montana Human Rights Commission 225 days after the most recent or continuing act of employment discrimination. Under this section, a complaint must be filed within 180 days after the unlawful discriminatory practice occurred or was discovered, and if the complaint is not timely filed, it may not be considered by the Commission. Further, pursuant to Hash v. U.S. W. Communications Serv., 268 M 326, 886 P2d 442 (1994), timely filing before the Commission is a prerequisite to filing an employment discrimination complaint in District Court because Title 49, ch. 2, commonly known as the Montana Human Rights Act, is the exclusive remedy for employment discrimination under Montana law. Skites' complaint was not timely filed with the Commission, thus her ability to prosecute the discrimination complaint in District Court was precluded. The District Court did not err in determining that no genuine issue of material fact existed that would preclude summary judgment for the employer. Skites v. Blue Cross Blue Shield of Mont., 1999 MT 301, 297 M 156, 991 P2d 955, 56 St. Rep. 1213 (1999).

Ability to Demonstrate Later Accrual of Action as Precluding Motion to Dismiss Based on Failure to State Claim — Human Rights Violation Claim: Powell was dismissed from his job with the Salvation Army on February 18, 1994, for the stated reason that he had been drinking on the job that day. Powell asserted that he learned months later that the dismissal was actually based on his past history of alcoholism, and he subsequently filed a grievance charge with the Human Rights Commission, alleging unlawful discrimination. The District Court granted a motion by the Salvation Army to dismiss for failure to state a claim for which relief could be granted for lack of jurisdiction based on Powell's failure to file a timely claim with the Commission. Under 27-2-102, the period of limitation applicable to any given cause of action begins to run when the claim or cause of action accrues, unless otherwise provided by statute. Pursuant to this section, a cause of action accrues under Title 49, ch. 2, commonly known as the Montana Human Rights Act, when the alleged unlawful discriminatory practice occurred or was discovered. Applying the principles in Hash v. U.S. W. Communication Serv., 268 M 326, 886 P2d 442 (1994), the Supreme Court found that Powell may well be able to demonstrate that his cause of action did not accrue until sometime after his termination and that he had thus complied with the applicable 300-day limitation period. The allegations in Powell's complaint were sufficient to withstand the Salvation Army's motion to dismiss, and the District Court erred in concluding otherwise. The case was remanded for further proceedings. Powell v. Salvation Army, 287 M 99, 951 P2d 1352, 54 St. Rep. 1518 (1997), following Willson v. Taylor, 194 M 123, 634 P2d 1180 (1981).

IDEA Complaint Held Subject to Exhaustion of Administrative Remedies Under Montana Human Rights Act: The Shieldses brought a civil action under 42 U.S.C. 1983 to enforce the rights of their son under the Individuals With Disabilities Education Act (IDEA) after he was excluded from a ski trip. The Shieldses had previously filed a grievance with the school, appealed the result of the grievance to the Superintendent of the Helena School District, and appealed the Superintendent's decision to the trustees of the School District. The District Court dismissed the section 1983 action, holding that the Shieldses failed to first file a complaint with the Human Rights Commission and thereby failed to exhaust their administrative remedies. The Shieldses argued that their case was a state tort action and did not fall within the jurisdiction of the Commission under Title 49, ch. 2, commonly known as the Montana Human Rights Act. Citing Harrison v. Chance, 244 M 215, 797 P2d 200 (1990), the Supreme Court held that because the gravamen of the complaint was discrimination, the complaint fell under the Montana Human Rights Act and that the Shieldses were therefore required to file a written, verified complaint with the Commission. The Supreme Court held that only after exhausting that procedure could they then bring a complaint in District Court. Shields v. Helena School District No. 1, 284 M 138, 943 P2d 999, 54 St. Rep. 815 (1997).

Right-to-Sue Letter Issued — Timely Filing of Complaint Prerequisite to Filing of Discrimination Suit: The issuance of a right-to-sue letter by the Human Rights Commission does not toll the statute of limitations, but rather constitutes the completion of the administrative process with regard to any complaint of discrimination in which a right-to-sue letter is issued. Moreover, the Human Rights Commission does not have the authority to establish jurisdiction in District Court. A right-to-sue letter is one mechanism permitting a claimant to proceed beyond the Human Rights Commission, assuming jurisdiction in the District Court is otherwise legally established. As held in Harrison v. Chance, 244 M 215, 797 P2d 200 (1990), the timely filing of a complaint with the Commission is a prerequisite to filing suit on a discrimination complaint. Hash v. U.S. W. Communications Serv., 268 M 326, 886 P2d 442, 51 St. Rep. 1404 (1994).

Statute of Limitations in Employment Discrimination Case Triggered at Time of Notice of Elimination of Job: U.S. West notified Hash on June 19, 1991, that her position would be eliminated January 31, 1992. The job elimination occurred as scheduled. On June 5, 1992, Hash filed a discrimination complaint with the Human Rights Commission. At the subsequent trial, Hash argued that the statutory period started at the termination date because she had hoped and believed, up to the time of termination, that she would be given another position with the corporation. Nevertheless, her hopes and beliefs did not contradict the fact that she discovered the alleged discriminatory act on June 19, 1991, and her cause of action accrued on that date. The District Court properly found that the filing period for Hash's complaint had expired. Hash v. U.S. W. Communications Serv., 268 M 326, 886 P2d 442, 51 St. Rep. 1404 (1994).

Unnamed Bar Owner Party to Action Due to Knowledge of Complaint: The District Court properly found that a bar owner who was aware of the complaint was properly notified of the complaint naming her bar and an employee, but not her, and was a party to the proceeding. Vainio v. Brookshire, 258 M 273, 852 P2d 596, 50 St. Rep. 529 (1993).

Workers' Compensation Not Exclusive Remedy for Sexual Harassment on the Job: Sexual harassment on the job is an intentional act not arising from an accident, and the Workers' Compensation Act is not an exclusive remedy for a claim for damages for emotional pain and suffering. Vainio v. Brookshire, 258 M 273, 852 P2d 596, 50 St. Rep. 529 (1993).

Amended Complaint for Retaliatory Termination as Relating Back to Employment Discrimination Complaint: After Simmons returned from a leave of absence from employment with Mountain Bell because of a back injury, she was demoted for absenteeism. She then filed a complaint with the Human Rights Commission, alleging employment discrimination. Later, Simmons was terminated for insubordination, whereupon she filed an amended complaint with the Commission, approximately 1 year after the filing of her original complaint, alleging retaliatory termination. A hearing examiner for the Commission held that the second complaint by Simmons was barred as being beyond the 180-day limit contained in this section. The District Court reversed, holding that the second complaint related back to the filing of the first. The Supreme Court affirmed, holding that under former Rule 15(c), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), the amended complaint for termination arose from the filing of the employment discrimination charge and thus arose from the same conduct for the purposes of computing time under former Rule 15(c). Simmons v. Mtn. Bell, 246 M 205, 806 P2d 6, 47 St. Rep. 1857 (1990).

No Vested Contract Right in Human Rights Discrimination Claim: Unlike a workers' compensation claimant, a claimant in a human rights discrimination action has no vested contract right to application of the laws in effect at the time of the injury. Even though the alleged discriminatory acts could be termed a breach of the implied employment contract, the gravamen of the claim is still discrimination. Because there is no vested contract right, the exclusive remedy provision of 49-2-509 (now repealed) does not violate the claimant's right to contract. Harrison v. Chance, 244 M 215, 797 P2d 200, 47 St. Rep. 1539 (1990), distinguishing Carmichael v. Workers' Comp. Court, 234 M 410, 763 P2d 1122 (1988).

No Constitutional Right to Jury Trial in Racial Discrimination Suit: In a racial discrimination suit, the plaintiff argued that a statute requiring him to file his complaint with the Commission for Human Rights denied him his constitutional right to a jury trial. The Supreme Court ruled that when the Legislature creates a new "public right", it can assign the adjudication of that right to an administrative agency without violating the constitutional mandate of preserving the jury trial in suits at common law. Romero v. J&J Tire, 238 M 146, 777 P2d 292, 46 St. Rep. 1159 (1989), followed in Vainio v. Brookshire, 258 M 273, 852 P2d 596, 50 St. Rep. 529 (1993).

Human Rights Act Not Exclusive Remedy for Sexual Harassment: When plaintiff failed to obtain a "right-to-sue" letter from the Commission for Human Rights prior to filing a civil suit alleging sexual harassment, the District Court granted summary judgment for defendants. On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed, ruling that the 180-day statute of limitations provision provided in 49-2-501 demonstrates legislative intent that the Human Rights Act not be the sole and exclusive remedy for acts which also give rise to an independent, common law cause of action. Drinkwalter v. Shipton Supply Co., Inc., 225 M 380, 732 P2d 1335, 44 St. Rep. 318 (1987), distinguished in Frigon v. Morrison-Maierle, Inc., 233 M 113, 760 P2d 57, 45 St. Rep. 1344 (1988), but see Harrison v. Chance, 244 M 215, 797 P2d 200, 47 St. Rep. 1539 (1990), in which the Supreme Court found that the 1987 amendment to 49-2-509 (now repealed) demonstrated a clear intent to legislatively overrule Drinkwalter and to allow the Commission for Human Rights to provide the exclusive remedy for discrimination in employment, including sexual harassment, and followed in Bruner v. Yellowstone County, 272 M 261, 900 P2d 901, 52 St. Rep. 699 (1995).

49-2-503. Temporary relief by court order.

Compiler's Comments

2007 Amendment: Chapter 28 near middle of first sentence after "commissioner" inserted "the department" and after "or the" substituted "charging party" for "complainant"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective July 1, 2007.

1997 Amendment: Chapter 467 near middle of first sentence, after "application of", substituted "the commissioner" for "the commission". Amendment effective July 1, 1997.

Applicability — Saving Clause: Section 20, Ch. 467, L. 1997, provided: "[This act] does not affect any administrative or judicial proceeding pending or commenced prior to [the effective date of this act] [effective July 1, 1997]. [This act] applies to complaints or proceedings filed on or after [the effective date of this act]."

1991 Amendment: Near beginning after "chapter", substituted language authorizing District Court, upon application by Commission or complainant, to enter preliminary injunction against respondent for former language that read: "alleging an unlawful discriminatory practice, the commission may file a petition in the district court in the county in which the subject of the complaint occurs or in the county in which a respondent resides or transacts business seeking appropriate temporary relief against this practice, including an order restraining the respondent from interfering in any manner with an order the commission may enter with respect to the complaint"; and deleted (2) that read: "(2) The court has the power to grant the temporary relief or restraining order it considers just and proper. However, no relief or order extending beyond 14 days may be granted except by consent of the respondent or upon a finding by the court that there is reasonable cause to believe that the respondent has engaged in discriminatory practices".

49-2-504. Informal investigation — conciliation — findings.

Compiler's Comments

2011 Amendment: Chapter 205 inserted (2)(b) pertaining to extension of investigation if parties enter into mediation; in (7) at beginning of second sentence inserted "Unless the time period is extended as provided in subsection (2)(b)"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective April 18, 2011.

2007 Amendment: Chapter 28 in (1) near middle after "impartially" substituted "to determine whether there is reasonable cause to believe that" for "If the department determines that"; inserted (2)(a) allowing mediation during the informal investigation process; in (2)(b) at beginning inserted "If the department makes a finding under subsection (7)(c) that there is reasonable cause to believe that unlawful discrimination occurred, the department", after "complaint by" deleted "conference", and after "conciliation" substituted "in a manner" for "and persuasion"; in (4) at beginning of first sentence after "If" substituted "the department determines" for "a complaint is filed relative to an employment-related complaint and if the commissioner decides", after "or information" substituted "obtained by the department" for "contained in the complaint", and at end after "information" deleted "contained in the complaint"; in (7)(a) at beginning of first sentence substituted "After the informal investigation, the department shall issue a finding on whether there is reasonable cause to believe that a preponderance of the evidence supports the charging party's allegation of unlawful discrimination. The finding must be issued" for "The department shall make a finding regarding the merit or nonmerit of the complaint" and in second sentence after "shall" substituted "issue" for "make"; inserted (7)(b) concerning dismissal of the case; inserted (7)(c) regarding certification of the case for hearing; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective July 1, 2007.

1997 Amendment: Chapter 467 in first sentence of (1)(a), near beginning, substituted "department" for "commission staff", near beginning of second sentence substituted "department" for "staff", substituted "a preponderance of the evidence" for "substantial evidence", substituted "attempt to achieve a resolution of the complaint by conference, conciliation, and persuasion that, in addition to providing redress for the complaint, includes conditions that" for "immediately try to", and at end substituted "if any, identified in the investigation" for "by conference, conciliation, and persuasion", and inserted remainder of subsection concerning various notification; inserted (1)(b) concerning employment-related complaint; inserted (2) concerning answer to complaint; inserted (3) concerning commencement of proceedings; inserted (4) concerning finding of merit or nonmerit; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective July 1, 1997.

Applicability — Saving Clause: Section 20, Ch. 467, L. 1997, provided: "[This act] does not affect any administrative or judicial proceeding pending or commenced prior to [the effective date of this act] [effective July 1, 1997]. [This act] applies to complaints or proceedings filed on or after [the effective date of this act]."

Case Notes

Human Rights Action — Not Exclusively Administrative Remedy: Since the 2007 amendments to the Montana Human Rights Act, Title 49, ch. 2, claims are not exclusively an administrative remedy. A party may take a case to District Court for a trial on the merits if the action is dismissed by the Human Rights Bureau, and the District Court may provide the same relief as could have been granted in the administrative process. Griffith v. Butte School Dist. No. 1, 2010 MT 246, 358 Mont. 193, 244 P.3d 321.

Human Rights Complaint — Gravamen Test No Longer Applicable: The plain language of the Montana Human Rights Act, Title 49, ch. 2, after its 2007 amendments, states that a charging party may file a complaint in District Court once the Human Rights Bureau dismisses a complaint as long as the party complies with 49-2-511. Thus it is no longer necessary to apply a "gravamen" analysis when determining whether a suit may be filed in District Court following the notice of dismissal. A "gravamen" analysis may still be proper in a claim alleging discrimination that is filed in District Court without first filing a claim before the Human Rights Bureau and receiving a notice of dismissal. Griffith v. Butte School Dist. No. 1, 2010 MT 246, 358 Mont. 193, 244 P.3d 321.

Federal Law — Settlement Agreement — Subsequent Enforcement: The federal Equal Employment Opportunity Commission entered into a sex discrimination settlement agreement before making an independent investigation and reasonable cause determination. This agreement could not be the basis for a subsequent enforcement action, absent investigation and conciliation efforts by the Commission. Equal Employment Opportunity Comm'n v. Pierce Packing Co., 669 F2d 605 (9th Cir. 1982).

49-2-505. Contested case hearing — appeal to commission — final agency decision.

Compiler's Comments

2007 Amendment: Chapter 28 in (1) at beginning of first sentence deleted "If the informal efforts to eliminate the alleged discrimination are unsuccessful" and near middle after "complaint" inserted "that is certified for hearing under 49-2-504 or that is remanded for hearing by the commission or by a reviewing court"; in (2) near beginning of first sentence after "agree to" substituted "extend the time for hearing beyond" for "permit the department to retain jurisdiction of the case under this chapter for a period of time that exceeds", at end of second sentence after "case" inserted "in accordance with the stipulated schedule", and at beginning of third sentence substituted "After a hearing date is set" for "The case must be heard no later than 90 days after the date is set by the department"; in (3)(a) in first sentence after "party" deleted "charged in the complaint", in second sentence in two places substituted "charging party" for "complainant", and in third sentence near beginning after "hearing" deleted "and any subsequent proceedings under this chapter" and at end after "Procedure" deleted "as adopted by the department"; inserted (3)(c) requiring issuance of a decision after a hearing if a case is not resolved; in (4) near beginning after "officer" substituted "by filing an appeal" for "to the commission. A party shall provide notice of its appeal" and after "commission" substituted "within 14 days after the issuance" for "the department, and all parties within 10 business days of receipt"; in (5) in first sentence near end after "receipt of" substituted "an" for "notice of", inserted second sentence allowing the commission to affirm, reject, or modify the decision in whole or in part, and in third sentence after "render a" inserted "final agency"; in (7) at beginning after "The" inserted "department or the" and near end after "in a" deleted "contested case"; in (8) at end of first and second sentences after "fees" inserted "and costs"; inserted (9) concerning petition for judicial review of a final agency decision; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective July 1, 2007.

1997 Amendment: Chapter 467 in (1), in first sentence after "unsuccessful", substituted "the department shall hold a hearing on the complaint" for "the staff shall inform the commission of the failure and the commission shall cause written notice to be served, together with a copy of the complaint, requiring the person, educational institution, financial institution, or governmental entity or agency charged in the complaint to answer the allegations of the complaint at a hearing before the commission" and inserted second sentence concerning service; inserted (2) concerning period of retention of jurisdiction and time of hearing; in (3)(a), in two places, substituted "department" for "commission", in first sentence, after "unless", substituted "a party" for "the person, institution, entity, or agency" and after "complaint" substituted "requests and is granted" for "or the commission requests", in second sentence, after "by", deleted "the staff", and in third sentence substituted "applicable portions of the Montana Rules of Civil Procedure as adopted by the department" for "Montana Administrative Procedure Act except as provided in 49-2-508"; inserted (3)(b) concerning presentation of evidence; inserted (4) concerning appeal of decision to Commission; inserted (5) concerning telephonic hearings; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective July 1, 1997.

Applicability — Saving Clause: Section 20, Ch. 467, L. 1997, provided: "[This act] does not affect any administrative or judicial proceeding pending or commenced prior to [the effective date of this act] [effective July 1, 1997]. [This act] applies to complaints or proceedings filed on or after [the effective date of this act]."

Administrative Rules

Title 24, chapter 9, subchapter 3, ARM Contested case hearing.

Case Notes

Counsel's Failure to Discover Notice Insufficient Cause for Relief From Appeal Deadline: In a discrimination claim under the Human Rights Act, misplacement of a notice of appeal by counsel or counsel's staff did not constitute good cause for relief from the 14-day period for filing appeals under 49-2-505(3)(c) because untimely appeals may be excused only when the parties acted with reasonable diligence to preserve their legal rights but have been prevented from doing so by circumstances reasonably beyond their control. BNSF Ry. Co. v. Cringle, 2012 MT 143, 365 Mont. 304, 281 P.3d 203. See also BNSF Ry. Co. v. Cringle, 2010 MT 290, 359 Mont. 20, 247 P.3d 706.

Statutory Filing Deadline Not Jurisdictional — District Court to Allow Equitable Relief Upon Remand — Separation of Powers Implicated: Because of a calendaring error, the plaintiff railway's counsel missed the deadline imposed by 49-2-505 for an appeal of a decision of the Human Rights Bureau to the Human Rights Commission but submitted an out-of-time appeal. The defendant argued that the 14-day deadline imposed by 49-2-505 was jurisdictional, and the Commission and the District Court, in issuing an order to enforce the order of the Human Rights Bureau, agreed. Citing Davis v. St., 2008 MT 226, 344 Mont. 300, 187 P.3d 654, Miller v. Eighteenth Jud. Dist., 2007 MT 149, 337 Mont. 488, 162 P.3d 121, and St. v. Johnston, 2008 MT 318, 346 Mont. 93, 193 P.3d 925, among other cases, for the proposition that "categorical time prescriptions" or filing deadlines do not withdraw subject matter jurisdiction from a District Court, the Supreme Court reversed. The Supreme Court held that the District Court was not deprived of jurisdiction and that, upon remand, the District Court should consider the issue of why the railway's counsel missed the deadline and should, if it finds good cause, exercise its equitable powers to allow the appeal. The dissent argued that the majority's opinion implicated the separation of powers doctrine because the majority had no authority to allow an exception to the statutory filing deadline. BNSF Ry. Co. v. Cringle, 2010 MT 290, 359 Mont. 20, 247 P.3d 706. See also BNSF Ry. Co. v. Cringle, 2012 MT 143, 365 Mont. 304, 281 P.3d 203.

Application of Lodestar Approach to Determine Reasonable Attorney Fees in Human Rights Action — Reasonableness Required: Attorney Best represented five claimants in a human rights claim against Cascade County. Only one claimant was successful and therefore entitled to attorney fees. When the claimant petitioned for an award of attorney fees, Best acknowledged that the time spent on the case was for all the claimants but that because the work was all related to a single core set of facts and the same legal theories, it was impossible to separate the work done for the unsuccessful clients from the work done for the successful client. The county presented no evidence to the contrary but protested the award. The District Court decided that it had no other choice than to reduce the amount of the claimed fees, because Best had represented five clients and only one was entitled to attorney fees. Therefore, the court applied the lodestar approach to determine a reasonable fee, calculating the number of hours reasonably expended and multiplying it by a reasonable hourly rate, which resulted in a reduction of Best's fee for 74 hours worked for the other clients. On appeal, the Supreme Court concluded that the lodestar approach was an appropriate method to determine a reasonable fee but reversed because the final calculation was not reasonable. The county presented nothing for the District Court to rely on to reduce the hours claimed, and the lack of evidence resulted in an arbitrary decision by the District Court constituting an abuse of discretion. The case was remanded for a recalculation of a reasonable amount of attorney fees. Edwards v. Cascade County, 2009 MT 229, 351 M 360, 212 P3d 289 (2009).

Erroneous Judgment Overpayment Properly Offset Against Attorney Fees: Plaintiff was awarded $40,948.83 in a human rights case against Cascade County. The county subsequently sent plaintiff another check for $28,062.95. Plaintiff's attorney inquired whether the check was a partial payment of fees and costs, and the County Attorney replied that the check was in response to the order of the Human Rights Bureau, which did not relate to fees. The county eventually contended that the check was sent in error and sought repayment through a reduction in attorney fees. Plaintiff asserted that the county released its claim for a refund. The District Court disagreed and ordered that the overpayment be offset against the attorney fees owed by the county. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. The county, through the County Attorney, made a mistake in stating what the check was for, and the letter did not constitute an unequivocal release of a claim to recover the overpayment mistakenly made by the county, nor did the county release the claim through abandonment. Therefore, the District Court did not err in ordering that the county recover its overpayment by offsetting that amount against the attorney fees owed by the county to plaintiff as the prevailing party in the human rights action. Edwards v. Cascade County, 2009 MT 229, 351 M 360, 212 P3d 289 (2009).

Dismissal of Complaint When Proceedings Not Concluded Within Twelve Months of Filing of Complaint Absent Stipulation to Extend Time for Hearing: If the parties to a discrimination case mutually agree to allow the Department of Labor and Industry to retain jurisdiction under this chapter for a period of time that exceeds 12 months after a complaint is filed, then the parties must stipulate to that agreement. If no stipulation occurs and proceedings are not concluded within 12 months after a complaint is filed, the complaint is subject to dismissal. Indian Health Bd. of Billings, Inc. v. Dept. of Labor and Industry, 2008 MT 48, 341 M 411, 177 P3d 1029 (2008).

Court Deference to Hearings Examiner Rather Than Reweighing Evidence: A court reviewing an agency decision may not substitute its judgment for that of the agency as to the weight of the evidence on questions of fact. As long as the court determines that substantial credible evidence exists to support the findings of the trier of fact, the court may not reweigh the evidence, but must instead defer to the hearings examiner. Benjamin v. Anderson, 2005 MT 123, 327 M 173, 112 P3d 1039 (2005), followed in Denke v. Shoemaker, 2008 MT 418, 347 M 322, 198 P3d 284 (2008). See also Moran v. Shotgun Willies, Inc., 270 M 47, 889 P2d 1185 (1995).

Costs of Contested Employment Discrimination Administrative Hearing Not Allowed Absent Adoption of Rules of Civil Procedure by Agency: The Department of Labor and Industry conducted an administrative hearing to address plaintiff's employment discrimination claim. Defendants made an offer of judgment that plaintiff refused, but defendants ultimately prevailed and then contended that plaintiff was responsible for the costs of the hearing under 25-10-501, former Rule 68, M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), and this section. The Department determined that the general legislative mandate to follow the Montana Rules of Civil Procedure did not empower the agency to award costs in a contested case hearing. The District Court agreed, and on appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. Under this section, the Montana Rules of Civil Procedure apply only in agency hearings to the extent that the rules are adopted by the agency. Former Rule 68, M.R.Civ.P., which allows recovery of costs after a judgment, has not been adopted by the Department to apply in agency-conducted administrative hearings related to employment discrimination. Absent a statutory basis, the award of costs was not proper. Pannoni v. Browning School District No. 9 Bd. of Trustees, 2004 MT 130, 321 M 311, 90 P3d 438 (2004).

Offer of Judgment to State That Attorney Fees Not Included to Effect Waiver of Discretionary Attorney Fees: Plaintiff, a nonprofit corporation formed to protect and increase equal housing opportunities, filed an administrative complaint against defendants for violating this chapter, commonly known as the Human Rights Act, by denying equal housing opportunities based on familial status, age, and marital status. Following an administrative investigation, the Commission for Human Rights found that plaintiff's allegations were supported by substantial evidence and that there was reasonable cause to believe that defendants violated state fair housing laws. Defendants ultimately served plaintiff an offer of judgment pursuant to former Rule 68, M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), which stipulated that judgment would be taken against defendants in the amount of $2,000 "together with costs only that accrued". Plaintiff accepted the offer, and judgment was entered against defendants. Plaintiff subsequently sought attorney fees as the prevailing party, but the request was denied by the District Court because the offer of judgment did not expressly include attorney fees, so plaintiff appealed. The Supreme Court noted that it is in the interests of both parties that an offer of judgment be clear and unambiguous in order to effect a waiver of attorney fees; however, the offer itself need not include the term "attorney fees" to effect a waiver. In the present case, the offer of judgment included costs, but it was not clear whether attorney fees were included, nor did the offer state that the sum to be paid was consideration for the resolution of all counts. Thus, it was ambiguous whether plaintiff, by accepting the offer, waived the right to attorney fees. The offer of judgment did not include a specific waiver of attorney fees, so the District Court erred in concluding that plaintiff's acceptance of the offer constituted a waiver of attorney fees. The Supreme Court remanded for a determination of whether to award plaintiff discretionary attorney fees under the Human Rights Act. Mont. Fair Housing, Inc. v. Barnes, 2002 MT 353, 313 M 409, 61 P3d 170 (2002), distinguished, with regard to an offer of full payment, in Wyant v. Kenda, 2004 MT 348, 324 M 342, 102 P3d 1260 (2004). See also Nordby v. Anchor Hocking Packaging Co., 199 F3d 390 (7th Cir. 1999).

Test for Determining Prevailing Party in Mixed Motive Employment Discrimination Case: Laudert suffered liver failure while employed by the Richland County Sheriff's Department (RCSD) and had to resign. Following Laudert's full recovery, his former position came open again and he applied but was not rehired. He filed a discrimination charge on grounds of age and disability. The hearings examiner found that questions asked by the RCSD interview panel constituted direct evidence that RCSD had unlawfully considered Laudert's disability, but did not award damages because Laudert would not have been hired even in the absence of any unlawful consideration of his disability. The District Court held that Laudert was not entitled to attorney fees because he did not prevail on the ultimate basis for his petition. Laudert appealed the denial of attorney fees, asserting that because the hearings examiner found that his disability had been unlawfully considered and because affirmative relief was awarded against RCSD in the form of an injunctive order requiring RCSD to submit a written policy regarding hiring procedures, including guidelines regarding future inquiry into applicant disabilities, he was the prevailing party. The Supreme Court held that the District Court erred in applying the "central issue" and "primary relief sought" tests for determining the prevailing party, analyses expressly repudiated in Tex. St. Teachers Ass'n v. Garland Independent School District, 489 US 782 (1989). Requiring plaintiff to prevail on the ultimate basis for a petition is an inappropriate test for determining whether attorney fees should be awarded under this section. Under Farrar v. Hobby, 506 US 103 (1992), a plaintiff prevails when actual relief on the merits of the claim materially alters the legal relationship between the parties by modifying the defendant's behavior in a way that directly benefits the plaintiff. Here, the order of affirmative injunctive relief clearly modified RCSD's behavior. However, the Supreme Court rejected the Farrar requirement that a plaintiff secure a direct benefit at the time of the judgment in order to be a prevailing party because that requirement would not further the purpose of awarding attorney fees under Title 49, ch. 2, commonly known as the Montana Human Rights Act. Complaints of civil rights abuses that successfully establish a finding of discrimination and an order of injunctive relief are the type of meritorious litigation that should be encouraged. The District Court's determination that Laudert did not prevail because RCSD proved it would have made the same hiring decision, despite its consideration of Laudert's disability, was reversible error. Laudert v. Richland County Sheriff's Dept., 2000 MT 218, 301 M 114, 7 P3d 386, 57 St. Rep. 872 (2000). See also Dolan v. School District No. 10, 195 M 340, 636 P2d 825 (1981), and Wagner v. Empire Dev. Corp., 228 M 370, 743 P2d 586 (1987). Following remand for determination of a reasonable fee award under this section, the District Court noted that Laudert was the prevailing party in the 2000 case, even though Laudert's request for damages was denied, and awarded Laudert's counsel fees for all time expended. The RCSD appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. The Supreme Court cited Pa. v. Del. Valley Citizens' Council for Clean Air, 478 US 546 (1986), for the strong presumption, given the rationale behind fee-shifting provisions, that the lodestar amount is a reasonable fee, noting that fee-shifting statutes were not designed to be windfalls for attorneys or to replicate the amount that an attorney would receive in other types of litigation, but rather to enable private parties to retain the legal assistance necessary to seek redress when their rights are violated. The court also applied the two-step approach in Hensley v. Eckerhart, 461 US 424 (1983), to address other considerations that may lead to a fee adjustment in cases when attorney fees are recoverable by a partially prevailing plaintiff in pursuit of unsuccessful claims. Under Hensley, an attorney should receive fees for the full services provided when plaintiff has obtained excellent results, even if plaintiff does not prevail on every claim. In this case, Laudert achieved the level of success necessary to support the award of the full amount of fees claimed, and the District Court did not err in awarding the full amount. Laudert v. Richland County Sheriff's Dept., 2001 MT 287, 307 M 403, 38 P3d 790 (2001). See also Ihler v. Chisholm, 2000 MT 37, 298 M 254, 995 P2d 439 (2000).

Sanctions at Hearing for Failure to Disclose: A ruling by the Human Rights Commission striking part of defendant's witnesses and exhibits was proper because of defendant's failure to disclose witnesses, exhibits, and documents relating to the stricken matters. Vainio v. Brookshire, 258 M 273, 852 P2d 596, 50 St. Rep. 529 (1993).

Test for Granting Prevailing Defendant Attorney Fees: Civil rights acts depend upon private individuals to uphold the public policy in the acts. To avoid discouraging the filing of meritorious claims before the Human Rights Commission under this chapter, commonly referred to as the Montana Human Rights Act, the Supreme Court, in a case of first impression, adopted as the standard for whether a prevailing defendant in a Commission hearing will be granted attorney fees the test that the claim must have been frivolous, unreasonable, or groundless or that plaintiff continued to litigate after the claim clearly became so. A plaintiff who establishes a prima facie case will generally prevail under the test. The fact that plaintiff here also pursued federal administrative proceedings, lost the commission hearing, and apparently refused a compromise offer from defendant did not make her claim unreasonable or in bad faith. Defendant's protest that it is a small school and will suffer a hardship if it has to pay its own attorney fees will not relieve it of that burden in light of the strong public policy of encouraging possibly meritorious claims. McCann v. Trustees, Dodson School District, 249 M 362, 816 P2d 435, 48 St. Rep. 762 (1991).

Standards of Judicial Review: In this case concerning a claim of sexual discrimination in employment, the Supreme Court held that the standards for judicial review of a determination by an administrative agency are set forth in this section. Findings of fact by an administrative agency are subject to the clearly erroneous standard of review, and conclusions of law are subject to the abuse of discretion standard of review. P.W. Berry Co., Inc. v. Freese, 239 M 183, 779 P2d 521, 46 St. Rep. 1605 (1989).

Failure to Award Statutory Attorney Fees — No Abuse of Discretion: Plaintiff was awarded restitution for successfully bringing an employment discrimination charge. Based on a contingent fee agreement, plaintiff paid her attorney one-third of the award and subsequently requested attorney fees as prevailing party under 49-2-505(4). Following an evidentiary hearing, the District Court denied the request. On appeal, the Supreme Court found no abuse in failing to award statutory attorney fees since there was sufficient evidence that plaintiff's attorney was adequately and reasonably compensated for her efforts under the contingent fee agreement, whether or not reference was made to federal fee shifting statutes. Wagner v. Empire Dev. Corp., 228 M 370, 743 P2d 586, 44 St. Rep. 1606 (1987).

Modification of Findings of Fact by Commission Held Proper: When the Human Rights Commission, in redetermining a backpay award, held a supplemental hearing and applied a different termination date from that applied by the hearing examiner and consequently modified two of the hearing examiner's findings of fact, without stating that the findings were not based on substantial evidence, the Supreme Court upheld the Commission's determination. Billings v. Mont. Human Rights Comm'n, 209 M 251, 681 P2d 33, 41 St. Rep. 688 (1984).

Substantial Evidence of Illegal Discrimination Found: When the evidence established that: (1) claimant was 71 years of age and therefore a member of a protected class; (2) claimant was qualified to perform the work and had done so for a number of years; (3) claimant was discharged despite his qualifications; (4) claimant was the only custodian on his shift who was more than 30 years of age; and (5) claimant's coworkers referred to him derogatorily as "grandpa" and "old man", and when claimant's testimony that his supervisory personnel had failed to prevent his harassment by coworkers was substantiated, the Supreme Court ruled that there was reliable, probative, and substantial evidence in the record to support the Commission's determination that claimant's employment problems were directly related to his coworkers' discriminatory actions, that those actions were based solely on claimant's age, and that the employer tolerated discriminatory actions and failed to maintain a work environment free of intimidation. Billings v. Mont. Human Rights Comm'n, 209 M 251, 681 P2d 33, 41 St. Rep. 688 (1984).

Standard of Review of Commission Decision: A District Court's choice of the substantial evidence standard as the proper standard of review of a decision of the Human Rights Commission was proper. Billings v. Mont. Human Rights Comm'n, 209 M 251, 681 P2d 33, 41 St. Rep. 688 (1984).

Discrimination — Reference to Federal Law Proper — Substantial Evidence Required: Petitioner filed an employment discrimination claim with the Human Rights Commission alleging that he was forced to resign from his position as a welder with respondent because of racial harassment. The hearing examiner found no discrimination, and petitioner appealed. The District Court and the Supreme Court affirmed the hearing examiner's determination and held that Title VII of the federal Civil Rights Act of 1964 and reference to pertinent federal case law in determining claims under Title 49 (MCA) are both useful and appropriate. Where the hearing examiner's findings were supported by substantial credible evidence and petitioner had failed to make a prima facie showing of discrimination, the court could not substitute its judgment and the hearing examiner's findings were upheld. Snell v. Montana-Dakota Util. Co., 198 M 56, 643 P2d 841, 39 St. Rep. 763 (1982).

Date of Requested Rehearing — Running of Judicial Review Period: The 30-day period under 2-4-702 began to run when the Human Rights Commission issued its final order, not when the Commission denied a requested rehearing, since the Commission has no rule allowing a rehearing. Bradco Supply Co. v. Larsen, 183 M 97, 598 P2d 596 (1979).

Attorney General's Opinions

Deliberations of Commission Open to Public: The deliberations of the Human Rights Commission following a contested case hearing are subject to the Montana open meeting law. They must be open to the public unless the presiding officer determines that the discussion relates to a matter of individual privacy and that the demands of individual privacy clearly exceed the merits of public disclosure. 38 A.G. Op. 33 (1979).

Compiler's Comments

2007 Amendment: Chapter 28 in (1) near beginning substituted "hearings officer" for "commission or the department, after a hearing" and near middle after "complaint" deleted "the commission or"; in (3) at beginning after "Whenever" substituted "an order" for "a commission or department order"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective July 1, 2007.

1997 Amendment: Chapter 467 in (1), near beginning after "commission", substituted "or the department after a hearing, finds that a party" for "finds that a person, institution, entity, or agency" and after "commission" inserted "or the department"; in (3), near beginning after "commission", inserted "or department", after "inspection by" substituted "the department" for "the commission staff", and at end reduced time from 3 years to 1 year; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective July 1, 1997.

Applicability — Saving Clause: Section 20, Ch. 467, L. 1997, provided: "[This act] does not affect any administrative or judicial proceeding pending or commenced prior to [the effective date of this act] [effective July 1, 1997]. [This act] applies to complaints or proceedings filed on or after [the effective date of this act]."

1991 Amendment: At beginning of (2) inserted exception clause.

Case Notes

Husband Discriminated Against Based on Marital Status: Award of back pay to the husband was an appropriate remedy when a couple was fired due to the employer's dissatisfaction with the wife's job performance. The couple was hired as a management team, and there was no dissatisfaction with the husband's performance. Mercer v. McGee, 2008 MT 374, 346 M 484, 197 P3d 961 (2008).

No Finding of Malicious Prosecution, Abuse of Process, or Tortious Interference in Employment Discrimination Claim — Judgment as Matter of Law Proper: Lynch filed an employment discrimination claim against doctor Hughes for sexual harassment actions that Hughes took in a hospital in which Lynch was employed. The Commission for Human Rights determined that Hughes was not an employer or agent of an employer, so Hughes did not bear an employer's liability for sexual harassment. Hughes' behavior after Lynch filed the claim was determined to constitute illegal retaliation, but because Lynch did not claim retaliation, the claim was dismissed. Hughes then filed an action in District Court alleging malicious prosecution, abuse of process, and tortious interference. The court found that the claims could not be proved and granted Lynch judgment as a matter of law. Hughes appealed, but the Supreme Court examined each claim and affirmed. First, Hughes could not prove that there was a lack of probable cause for Lynch's action or that the proceeding favored Lynch, so the malicious prosecution claim failed. Second, nothing in the record showed that Lynch used abuse of process to coerce Hughes to do some collateral thing that Hughes could not be legally and regularly compelled to do, so the abuse of process claim also failed. Third, there was no evidence to suggest that Lynch's acts were calculated to damage Hughes, and Lynch was entitled to seek redress and damages for the alleged discrimination, so the tortious interference claim failed as well. Thus, the District Court correctly determined that no genuine issue of material fact existed and that Lynch was entitled to judgment as a matter of law. Hughes v. Lynch, 2007 MT 177, 338 M 214, 164 P3d 913 (2007), following Plouffe v. Dept. of Public Health and Human Services, 2002 MT 64, 309 M 184, 45 P3d 10 (2002), and Comm'n on Unauthorized Practice of Law v. O'Neil, 2006 MT 284, 334 M 311, 147 P3d 200 (2006), and followed in Judd v. Burlington N. & Santa Fe Ry. Co., 2008 MT 181, 343 M 416, 186 P3d 214 (2008), with regard to applicability of the probable cause standard for a malicious prosecution claim.

Court Reinstatement of Emotional Damage Award Following Arbitrary Reduction by Commission for Human Rights Affirmed: After finding that plaintiff was subjected to employment discrimination, the hearings examiner concluded that plaintiff was entitled to $75,000 in compensatory damages for emotional distress. The Commission for Human Rights reduced the award to $40,000, but the Commission did not cite any evidence to support the reduction, aside from the vague feeling of some Commissioners that the initial award was too high. The District Court reinstated the $75,000 award, and on appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. The hearings examiner had authority to award compensatory damages, and the hearings examiner's findings were supported by testimony from plaintiff, plaintiff's experts, and others. The Commission's reduction was arbitrary, and the District Court did not err in reinstating the original compensatory award. Benjamin v. Anderson, 2005 MT 123, 327 M 173, 112 P3d 1039 (2005).

No Error in Dismissal of Business Partner Uninvolved in Discrimination: Plaintiff sued a business, the business owner, the business manager, and the manager's husband for discrimination in employment. The hearings examiner found that it was the conduct of the business owner and the business manager that led to plaintiff's discharge from employment and dismissed the manager's husband from the suit. The District Court affirmed the finding, and on appeal, the Supreme Court agreed. The husband's conduct and apparent authority in the business were not sufficient to render him a de facto owner or operator of the business, and his dismissal from the suit was proper. Benjamin v. Anderson, 2005 MT 123, 327 M 173, 112 P3d 1039 (2005).

No Error in Failure to Reduce Wage Loss Recovery in Human Rights Case for Failure to Mitigate: After finding that plaintiff was subjected to employment discrimination, the hearings examiner concluded that plaintiff was entitled to recover lost wages. Defendants contended that the wage loss should be reduced because plaintiff failed to take reasonable steps to mitigate the damages. The Supreme Court agreed that in a claim for lost wages before the Commission for Human Rights, a claimant must take reasonable steps toward mitigating damages. Citing Hulett v. Bozeman School District, 228 M 71, 740 P2d 1132 (1987), the court noted that plaintiff was not obligated to seek out all possible employment opportunities, but needed only to be reasonable in pursuing offers of employment. In this case, it was undisputed that plaintiff was emotionally debilitated, and although there was evidence of other reasons why plaintiff did not immediately seek new employment, plaintiff's medical testimony and testimony concerning plaintiff's loss of confidence, anxiety, and reluctance to meet new people supported the hearings examiner's findings, and the Supreme Court declined to disturb those findings. Benjamin v. Anderson, 2005 MT 123, 327 M 173, 112 P3d 1039 (2005).

Award of Lost Wages Without Offset of Unemployment Compensation Benefits Affirmed: The Commission for Human Rights found that Foss was discriminated against by his employer because of marital status and awarded Foss $2,400, plus interest, for backpay. During the period for which Foss received backpay, he also received $1,066 in unemployment compensation benefits. The employer contended that the discrimination award should have been offset by the amount of unemployment compensation that Foss received because failure to do so would result in a windfall to Foss. The District Court and the Supreme Court affirmed the award. The purpose of Title 49, ch. 2, commonly known as the Montana Human Rights Act, is to return employees who are victims of discrimination to the position that they would have occupied without the discrimination. When a collateral source mitigates an employee's loss, the courts must decide who should receive the benefit. In this case, between the employer whose actions caused the discharge and the employee who most likely suffered other noncompensable losses, the burden was placed on the employer. The Legislature did not intend, through unemployment insurance, to insure employers against an award of backpay in the event that the employer illegally discharges an employee in violation of the Human Rights Act. Vortex Fishing Sys., Inc. v. Foss, 2001 MT 312, 308 M 8, 38 P3d 836 (2001).

Marital Status Discrimination — Award for Emotional Damages Affirmed: For the most part, federal case law involving antidiscrimination statutes draws a distinction between emotional distress claims in tort versus those in discrimination complaints (see Bolden v. SE. Pa. Transp. Authority, 21 F3d 29 (3rd Cir. 1994), Walz v. Town of Smithtown, 46 F3d 162 (2nd Cir. 1995), and Chatman v. Slagle, 107 F3d 380 (6th Cir. 1997)). The standard of proof of independent actions for emotional distress in Sacco v. High Country Independent Press, Inc., 271 M 209, 896 P2d 411 (1995), that emotional distress damages may be awarded only if there is a substantial invasion of a legally protected interest that causes a significant impact upon the claimant, does not apply in a discrimination context pursuant to Title 49, ch. 2, commonly known as the Montana Human Rights Act. Rather, compensatory damages for human rights claims may be awarded for humiliation and emotional distress established by testimony or inferred from the circumstances, and the severity of the harm should govern the amount, not the availability, of recovery. Here, the record revealed that the claimant had difficulty finding employment after being illegally denied employment based on marital status, lost sleep because of economic hardship, had to move in with relatives, was hounded by collection agencies, had to borrow money, and had to sell an automobile for sustenance. The Commission for Human Rights' award of $2,500 for emotional damages was adequately supported by the record and was affirmed. Vortex Fishing Sys., Inc. v. Foss, 2001 MT 312, 308 M 8, 38 P3d 836 (2001).

Exhaustion of Remedies Under Individuals With Disabilities Act Not Required Upon Claim of Discrimination in Public Education Under Human Rights Act: Amanda Johnson suffered from Campomelic Syndrome and as a result was confined to a wheelchair. Prior to Amanda's enrollment at Great Falls High School, her family brought Amanda's access issues to the attention of the Great Falls School District. There was no elevator in the school, which precluded Amanda's access to second-floor classrooms and science labs. There were numerous other physical barriers as well, such as parking problems, snow-covered sidewalks, cafeteria restrictions, heavy doors, office countertops that were too high, and inaccessibility to restrooms, water fountains, vending machines, and public telephones. The district determined that it could not build an elevator and continue to provide educational services to the rest of the student body; however, the district did prepare individualized education programs for Amanda each year that attempted to accommodate her by scheduling her classes on the first floor, transporting her to another high school for science labs, fitting desks for her and providing special seating, making minor physical adjustments to the building, providing a parking space for her in the faculty lot, attempting to coordinate snow removal with her arrival, and assigning a staff member to help her use the cafeteria. Nevertheless, her family was dissatisfied with the district's efforts and brought an education discrimination claim, alleging that the district illegally discriminated against Amanda by failing to provide an accessible building in violation of Title 49, ch. 2, commonly known as the Montana Human Rights Act (MHRA), and specifically 49-2-307 and 49-2-308. A hearings examiner found that Amanda did have far less access to the school than her classmates, but concluded that the district had provided reasonable access in light of the resources available to meet Amanda's needs. The hearings examiner ordered the district to proactively monitor accommodations provided to students with physical disabilities and to take a number of steps to minimize the likelihood of future violations of the MHRA. The Commission for Human Rights adopted the hearings examiner's findings and conclusions, and the district filed for judicial review, arguing to the District Court that: (1) the Commission lacked jurisdiction to consider the complaint until Amanda exhausted the administrative remedies under the Individuals With Disabilities Education Act (IDEA) through the Office of Public Instruction; and (2) the relief granted exceeded the Commission's statutory authority. The District Court agreed and overruled the Commission's order, and the issues were appealed to the Supreme Court. On the first issue, the Supreme Court found that the gravamen of Amanda's claim was grounded in discrimination under the MHRA, not the right to a free appropriate public education under the IDEA. Disabled students can receive an appropriate education, as attested by Amanda's 3.7 grade point average, and still suffer discrimination when the physical premises of a school deprive them of basic human dignities. When claims involve the simple application of the IDEA exhaustion doctrine in the absence of a parallel state statutory remedy, the logic of the IDEA exhaustion may apply, but when, as here, state human rights laws provide an administrative remedy through the Commission for Human Rights, there is no compelling reason to preclude the MHRA claim by first requiring the IDEA exhaustion. The court found no legal basis for determining that the IDEA was intended to limit applicable state human rights discrimination claims. Thus, Amanda's claim could proceed prior to exhaustion of or without ever invoking the IDEA administrative remedies, and the District Court erred in holding otherwise. On the second issue, the Supreme Court found that the remedy ordered by the Commission—requiring the district to formalize its policy and procedure for addressing the special needs of disabled students—fell within the authority of this section and was reasonable in light of the relief requested. The District Court was reversed, and the Commission's order was reinstated. Great Falls Pub. Schools v. Johnson, 2001 MT 95, 305 M 200, 26 P3d 734 (2001), following Harrison v. Chance, 244 M 215, 797 P2d 200 (1990), and Shields v. Helena School District No. 1, 284 M 138, 943 P2d 999 (1997), and distinguishing Koopman v. Freemont County School District No. 1, 911 P2d 1049 (Wyo. 1996).

Commission for Human Rights Discretion to Award Compensatory Damages in Mixed Motives Cases: Laudert suffered liver failure while employed by the Richland County Sheriff's Department (RCSD) and had to resign. Following Laudert's full recovery, his former position came open again and he applied but was not rehired. He filed a discrimination charge on grounds of age and disability. The hearings examiner found that questions asked by the RCSD interview panel constituted direct evidence that RCSD had unlawfully considered Laudert's disability, but did not award damages because Laudert would not have been hired even in the absence of any unlawful consideration of his disability. RCSD maintained that Laudert was not hired because of his employment history. The hearings examiner properly determined that this was a "mixed motive" case. Whether Laudert was entitled to compensatory damages depended on whether RCSD proved by a preponderance of the evidence that it would have made the same decision in the absence of Laudert's disability, and Laudert's employment history provided substantial evidence proving that Laudert would not have been hired in any event. The Supreme Court found that the hearings examiner properly exercised the statutory discretion to preclude damages, and the court affirmed the authority of the Commission for Human Rights to limit compensatory damages in mixed motive cases pursuant to ARM 24.9.611 and Price Waterhouse v. Hopkins, 490 US 228 (1989). Laudert v. Richland County Sheriff's Dept., 2000 MT 218, 301 M 114, 7 P3d 386, 57 St. Rep. 872 (2000).

Authority to Award Damages — Delegation to Human Rights Commission: The grant of authority to the Human Rights Commission to award reasonable damages does not grant unbridled authority and does not constitute an unlawful delegation of judicial and legislative powers. Vainio v. Brookshire, 258 M 273, 852 P2d 596, 50 St. Rep. 529 (1993).

Corrective and Preventive Orders Not in Violation of Right to Jury Trial: The right to a jury trial is not violated by the provision contained in this section, which states that upon finding that a person or entity is engaged in discrimination, the Human Rights Commission must order an end to the conduct and may require any reasonable measure to correct the conduct and rectify any harm to the person discriminated against. Vainio v. Brookshire, 258 M 273, 852 P2d 596, 50 St. Rep. 529 (1993).

$20,000 Sexual Harassment Award Upheld: The District Court did not err in upholding the Human Rights Commission's $20,000 emotional distress damages award for sexual harassment of a bar employee by another employee, which included brushing up against her buttocks, putting his hand up her skirt, grabbing her breasts, and requesting sex. Vainio v. Brookshire, 258 M 273, 852 P2d 596, 50 St. Rep. 529 (1993).

No Constitutional Right to Punitive Damages: In a racial discrimination suit, the plaintiff argued that there was a fundamental right to claim punitive damages but cited no authority. The Supreme Court held that punitive damages are an extraordinary remedy outside the field of usual redress and to which there is no constitutional right. Romero v. J&J Tire, 238 M 146, 777 P2d 292, 46 St. Rep. 1159 (1989), followed in Moran v. Shotgun Willies, Inc., 270 M 47, 889 P2d 1185, 52 St. Rep. 71 (1995).

Human Rights Commission Award of Backpay Contrary to Legal Conclusion of Hearing Examiner: It was not error for the Montana Human Rights Commission to award backpay when the hearing examiner, as a matter of law, refused to do so. After reviewing the record, the Commission may, under 2-4-621, reject or modify an examiner's conclusions of law. The Commission also has the authority under 49-2-506 to use its discretion to rectify harm done a person discriminated against. Unless the conclusions of the Commission in awarding backpay are arbitrary or capricious, which was not the case here, neither the District Court nor the Supreme Court may alter them. 49-2-508. Enforcement of commission or department order or conciliation agreement.

Compiler's Comments

2007 Amendment: Chapter 28 near beginning of first and second sentences after "commissioner" inserted "the department"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective July 1, 2007.

1997 Amendment: Chapter 467 in first sentence, near beginning, substituted "order issued under 49-2-506 is not obeyed, the commissioner or" for "commission's order is not obeyed, the commission staff or" and near end, before "order", inserted "or department's"; and inserted second sentence concerning breach of conciliation agreement. Amendment effective July 1, 1997.

Applicability — Saving Clause: Section 20, Ch. 467, L. 1997, provided: "[This act] does not affect any administrative or judicial proceeding pending or commenced prior to [the effective date of this act] [effective July 1, 1997]. [This act] applies to complaints or proceedings filed on or after [the effective date of this act]."

1985 Amendment — Applicability: In second clause, after "staff", deleted "shall" and inserted "or a party may"; and at end after "order", substituted "by any appropriate order" for "by injunction".

Section 3(2), Ch. 539, L. 1985, provided: "This act applies to cases pending with the commission for human rights or the district court on its effective date and to cases filed with the commission for human rights on or after its effective date (effective April 18, 1985)."

Federal Law — Settlement Agreement — Subsequent Enforcement: The federal Equal Employment Opportunity Commission entered into a sex discrimination settlement agreement before making an independent investigation and reasonable cause determination. 2007 Amendment: Chapter 28 in (1) in two places substituted "person" for "party"; in (2) at beginning after "If" deleted "the department, on appeal, or the commission", after "49-2-505" inserted "the department", after "that a" substituted "person" for "party", and near middle after "department" deleted "or the commission"; in (3) near beginning after "case of" substituted "a decision" for "an order", near middle after "agency, the" substituted "department" for "commission", and after "order" substituted "send a copy of the decision" for "or, if the order is judicially reviewed, no later than 30 days after the order is affirmed send copies of the findings of fact, the conclusions of law, and the order"; in (4)(a) at beginning of first sentence substituted "Following completion of the informal investigation of" for "When" and after "49-2-305, a" substituted "charging party" for "complainant", in second sentence near beginning after "made" inserted "in writing", after "later than" substituted "30 days after the service" for "20 days after receipt by the electing person of service", after "notice of" deleted "certification for", and at end after "49-2-505" inserted "on the electing party", in third sentence at beginning after "The" deleted "person making the", after "all" deleted "complainants and", and after "other" substituted "parties" for "respondents", and in fourth and fifth sentences substituted "charging party" for "complainant"; in (4)(b) inserted second and third sentences regarding commencement of a civil action and allowing an aggrieved party to intervene in the action; in (6) in second sentence after "fees" inserted "and costs"; in (7) at beginning substituted "All civil damages and penalties, monetary or otherwise, awarded under this section to an organization that is not an aggrieved party" for "Except as provided in subsection (7)(b), all civil and administrative penalties and other revenue generated under this part"; deleted former (7)(b) that read: "(b) Damages or penalties, whether monetary or otherwise, may not inure to an organization unless the organization is an aggrieved party. This section does not affect any amount owed to an aggrieved party"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective July 1, 2007.

1997 Amendments — Composite Section: Chapter 422 in (7)(a) substituted "deposited in the state general fund" for "deposited in an account in the state special revenue fund to be used by the commission for housing discrimination enforcement"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective July 1, 1997.

Chapter 467 throughout section substituted "party" for "person"; in (1), in first sentence, substituted "department" for "commission" and in second sentence, after "form", inserted "verified by the aggrieved party", substituted "department" for "commission", and reduced time from 1 year to 180 days; in (2), at beginning, deleted "Except as provided in subsection (2)(b)", before "commission" inserted "department, on appeal, or the", after "finds that a" substituted "party" for "person, institution, entity, or agency", and after "49-2-305, the" inserted "department or the"; in (2)(a) and (2)(b), after "been", substituted "adjudged in any prior judicial or formal administrative proceeding(s)" for "found"; in (2)(b), before "complaint", inserted "written"; deleted (2)(a)(iii) and (2)(b) that read: "(iii) in an amount not exceeding $50,000 if the respondent has been found to have committed two or more discriminatory housing practices in violation of 49-2-305 during the 7-year period ending on the date of the filing of the complaint.

(b) If the acts constituting the discriminatory housing practice that is the object of the complaint are committed by the same natural person who has been previously found to have committed acts constituting a discriminatory housing practice, the civil penalties provided in subsections (2)(a)(ii) and (2)(a)(iii) may be imposed without regard to the period of time within which any prior discriminatory housing practice occurred"; in (3), before "affirmed", deleted "in substance"; deleted (3)(b) that read: "(b) recommend to the licensing or regulatory agency appropriate disciplinary action, including, where appropriate, the suspension or revocation of the license of the respondent"; in (4)(a), in first sentence after "respondent", deleted "or aggrieved person on whose behalf the complaint was filed", in third through sixth sentences substituted "department" for "commission", in fourth sentence substituted "complainant, the commissioner, or the aggrieved party may" for "commission shall", and in fourth and fifth sentences substituted "preponderance of the evidence" for "substantial evidence"; in (4)(b) substituted "department" for "commission"; in (5)(b), in two places, substituted "department" for "commission"; in (5)(c), after "commission", inserted "or the department" and substituted "filing" for "beginning of a trial"; in (5)(d), after "commission" inserted "or the department"; in (5)(e)(i) inserted "and the respondent"; in (5)(e)(ii), in first sentence, substituted "party" for "applicant" and inserted second sentence concerning financial hardship; deleted (5)(f) that read: "(f) Upon timely application, the commission may intervene in a civil action brought under this subsection (5) if the commission certifies that the case is of general public importance. Upon intervention, the commission may obtain the same relief that would be available to the commission under subsection (7)"; in (6), near beginning of first sentence after "that a", substituted "party" for "person, institution, entity, or agency", after "has" inserted "been adjudicated in a civil or formal administrative proceeding to have", and after "may" substituted "consistent with the provisions of subsection (2)" for "in addition to the other remedies and injunctive and other equitable relief provided under 49-2-506" and near end of second sentence inserted "substantively"; deleted former (7) that read: "(7)(a) Whenever the commission has reasonable cause to believe that a person or group of persons is engaged in a pattern or practice in violation of 49-2-305 or that a group of persons has been discriminated against in violation of 49-2-305 and the denial raises an issue of general public importance, the commission may commence a civil action in an appropriate district court. The commission may also commence a civil action in any appropriate district court for relief regarding breach of a conciliation agreement in a case regarding an alleged violation of 49-2-305 if the commission is a party to the agreement.

(b) The commission may file a civil action under this subsection (7) within 18 months after the alleged breach of the conciliation agreement or unlawful discriminatory practice occurred or was discovered.

(c) In a civil action under this subsection (7), the court may, in addition to the remedies provided under 49-2-506, assess a civil penalty against the respondent:

(i) in an amount not exceeding $50,000 for a first violation; and

(ii) in an amount not exceeding $100,000 for any subsequent violation.

(d) Upon timely application, a person may intervene in a civil action under this subsection (7) that involves an alleged violation of 49-2-305 with respect to which the intervenor is an aggrieved person"; substituted (7)(a) concerning deposit of civil and administrative penalties in general fund for former text that read: "Civil penalties under this section must be paid to the state treasurer to be deposited in an account in the state special revenue fund to be used by the commission for housing discrimination enforcement"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective July 1, 1997.

Style changes in the chapters were slightly different. In each case, the codifier chose the more appropriate.

Applicability — Saving Clause: Section 20, Ch. 467, L. 1997, provided: "[This act] does not affect any administrative or judicial proceeding pending or commenced prior to [the effective date of this act] [effective July 1, 1997]. [This act] applies to complaints or proceedings filed on or after [the effective date of this act]."

Preamble: The preamble attached to Ch. 801, L. 1991, provided: "WHEREAS, the Legislature has previously included housing discrimination as a subject of discrimination law in the Montana Human Rights Act; and

WHEREAS, the housing discrimination laws in the Montana Human Rights Act were modeled after the federal Fair Housing Act of 1968; and

WHEREAS, in 1988, Congress substantially amended the federal Fair Housing Act, enforced by the Department of Housing and Urban Development; and

WHEREAS, the Montana Commission for Human Rights processes housing discrimination complaints in Montana that allege a violation of both the Montana Human Rights Act and the federal Fair Housing Act; and

WHEREAS, the Montana Commission for Human Rights receives a substantial portion of its funding from contracts with the Department of Housing and Urban Development for processing federal housing discrimination cases; and

WHEREAS, after January 13, 1992, the Department of Housing and Urban Development will no longer contract with any state fair housing agency that does not enforce a state law providing rights and remedies substantially equivalent to those provided by the federal Fair Housing Act; and

WHEREAS, the rights and remedies provided by the Montana Human Rights Act are not presently substantially equivalent to those provided by the federal Fair Housing Act.

THEREFORE, it is appropriate for the Legislature to amend the housing discrimination laws in the Montana Human Rights Act to maintain substantial equivalency with the federal Fair Housing Act."

Plaintiff's Failure to File Accurate Complaint Not Detrimental — Defendant Had Notice of Nature of Claim: A tenant filed a complaint with the Human Rights Commission alleging that her landlord committed sexual harassment under the public accommodations provision in 49-2-304. The Commission determined that 49-2-304 was inapplicable, as the rental property was private property, but it allowed the tenant to pursue a claim based on the real estate transaction provision in 49-2-305. The landlord then petitioned the District Court for judicial review, reasoning that his due process rights would be violated if the tenant was allowed to pursue a claim under 49-2-305. The District Court agreed with the landlord and reversed the Commission, but the Supreme Court, in turn, reversed the District Court and determined that while the tenant could have been clearer in asserting a claim under 49-2-305, the landlord had sufficient notice of the nature of the claim and no evidence was presented showing that the landlord would have presented any additional evidence in a 49-2-305 defense. Bates v. Neva, 2013 MT 246, 371 Mont. 466, 308 P.3d 114.

Offer of Judgment to State That Attorney Fees Not Included to Effect Waiver of Discretionary Attorney Fees: Plaintiff, a nonprofit corporation formed to protect and increase equal housing opportunities, filed an administrative complaint against defendants for violating this chapter, commonly known as the Human Rights Act, by denying equal housing opportunities based on familial status, age, and marital status. Following an administrative investigation, the Commission for Human Rights found that plaintiff's allegations were supported by substantial evidence and that there was reasonable cause to believe that defendants violated state fair housing laws. Defendants ultimately served plaintiff an offer of judgment pursuant to former Rule 68, M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), which stipulated that judgment would be taken against defendants in the amount of $2,000 "together with costs only that accrued". Plaintiff accepted the offer, and judgment was entered against defendants. Plaintiff subsequently sought attorney fees as the prevailing party, but the request was denied by the District Court because the offer of judgment did not expressly include attorney fees, so plaintiff appealed. The Supreme Court noted that it is in the interests of both parties that an offer of judgment be clear and unambiguous in order to effect a waiver of attorney fees; however, the offer itself need not include the term "attorney fees" to effect a waiver. In the present case, the offer of judgment included costs, but it was not clear whether attorney fees were included, nor did the offer state that the sum to be paid was consideration for the resolution of all counts. Thus, it was ambiguous whether plaintiff, by accepting the offer, waived the right to attorney fees. The offer of judgment did not include a specific waiver of attorney fees, so the District Court erred in concluding that plaintiff's acceptance of the offer constituted a waiver of attorney fees. The Supreme Court remanded for a determination of whether to award plaintiff discretionary attorney fees under the Human Rights Act. Mont. Fair Housing, Inc. v. Barnes, 2002 MT 353, 313 M 409, 61 P3d 170 (2002), distinguished, with regard to an offer of full payment, in Wyant v. Kenda, 2004 MT 348, 324 M 342, 102 P3d 1260 (2004). See also Nordby v. Human Rights Action — Not Exclusively Administrative Remedy: Since the 2007 amendments to the Montana Human Rights Act, Title 49, ch. 2, claims are not exclusively an administrative remedy. A party may take a case to District Court for a trial on the merits if the action is dismissed by the Human Rights Bureau, and the District Court may provide the same relief as could have been granted in the administrative process. Griffith v. Butte School Dist. No. 1, 2010 MT 246, 358 Mont. 193, 244 P.3d 321.

Human Rights Complaint — Gravamen Test No Longer Applicable: The plain language of the Montana Human Rights Act, Title 49, ch. 2, after its 2007 amendments, states that a charging party may file a complaint in District Court once the Human Rights Bureau dismisses a complaint as long as the party complies with 49-2-511. Thus it is no longer necessary to apply a "gravamen" analysis when determining whether a suit may be filed in District Court following the notice of dismissal. A "gravamen" analysis may still be proper in a claim alleging discrimination that is filed in District Court without first filing a claim before the Human Rights Bureau and receiving a notice of dismissal. Griffith v. Butte School Dist. No. 1, 2010 MT 246, 358 Mont. 193, 244 P.3d 321.

Chapter Case Notes

Single Incident of Sexual Assault — Work Environment That Is Not Subjectively Objectionable Not Considered Type of Hostile Environment to Be Actionable Under Title VII — Standard of Review: Following a single incident of sexual assault by a coworker, Beaver brought a claim against the Department of Natural Resources and Conservation (DNRC) under the Montana governmental code of fair practices; Title 49, ch. 2, commonly known as the Montana Human Rights Act; and Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, asserting that the incident was sufficiently severe or pervasive to alter employment conditions and to create a hostile and abusive working environment. Under Harris v. Forklift Sys., Inc., 510 US 17 (1993), to be sufficiently severe or pervasive to violate Title VII and establish a claim, the misconduct must create a working environment that is both objectively and subjectively offensive and that a reasonable person and the victim perceive as hostile and abusive. The correct legal standard for determining whether an environment is hostile or abusive under Title VII is to review the totality of the circumstances, including: (1) the frequency of the discriminatory conduct; (2) the severity of the conduct, whether it is physically threatening or humiliating or a mere offensive utterance; and (3) whether the conduct interferes with an employee's work performance. Psychological well-being is one factor among many in the determination. Here, the coworker was dismissed following the incident, and Beaver continued working for DNRC, testifying that conditions of employment did not change following the assault. Thus, the District Court correctly concluded that the work environment was not subjectively objectionable to Beaver and that the single incident of sexual assault did not create the type of hostile or abusive environment actionable under Title VII. Beaver v. Dept. of Natural Resources and Conservation, 2003 MT 287, 318 M 35, 78 P3d 857 (2003).

Attempt to Raise New Theory Five Days Before Trial Prejudicial: Allison brought a claim against the town of Clyde Park, alleging disability, sex, and age discrimination in employment. Five days before trial, Allison attempted to raise a new theory based on alleged violation of the governmental code of fair practices. The town moved to prohibit introduction of the new theory at trial, arguing that prejudice would result because of the lack of notice and the inability to prepare a defense. The District Court agreed and granted the town's motion to preclude introduction of the new theory. On appeal, Allison contended that the court erred in prohibiting raising of the new theory because the legal obligations in the governmental code of fair practices were not presented as a separate claim, but rather were intended as evidence of the discrimination claims. However, characterizing the newly alleged violations as evidence did not alter the fact that Allison attempted to introduce a new theory 5 days before trial. The court correctly found that the alleged violations were two distinct causes of action and that allowing introduction of the new cause of action so soon before trial would prejudice the town. Allison v. Clyde Park, 2000 MT 267, 302 M 55, 11 P3d 544, 57 St. Rep. 1119 (2000).

Mandatory Teacher Retirement Impliedly Repealed: In accordance with 20-4-203, the plaintiff, a tenured elementary school principal, received notification that because she was 65 years of age her contract would not be renewed. Because 20-4-203 permitted discrimination based solely on age with no qualifications or justifications bringing it within the limited exceptions of Title 49 and because the mandatory retirement provision bore no relationship to job performance, it was impliedly repealed by the adoption of 49-2-303 and 49-3-201. 1993 Amendment: Chapter 407 substituted "Physical or mental disability" for "Physical or mental handicap" as defined term and in two places in (b) substituted "disability" for "handicap"; and made minor changes in style.

1991 Amendment: Deleted former definition of mental handicap that read: ""Mental handicap" means any mental disability resulting in subaverage intellectual functioning or impaired social competence"; substituted present definition of physical or mental handicap for former definition of physical handicap that read: ""Physical handicap" means a physical disability, infirmity, malformation, or disfigurement which is caused by bodily injury, birth defect, or illness, including epilepsy. It includes without limitation any degree of paralysis; amputation; lack of physical coordination; blindness or visual impediment; deafness or hearing impediment; muteness or speech impediment; or physical reliance on a guide dog for the blind, a wheelchair, or any other remedial appliance or device"; and made minor changes in style.

Preamble: The preamble attached to Ch. 241, L. 1991, provided: "WHEREAS, the Legislature has previously included physical and mental handicaps as subjects of discrimination law in the Montana Human Rights Act and the Montana Governmental Code of Fair Practices; and

WHEREAS, the definitions previously adopted lack clarity and are inconsistent with definitions used in federal civil rights statutes and court interpretations on the subject; and

WHEREAS, federal handicap discrimination law requires reasonable accommodation for mental and physical handicaps.

THEREFORE, it is appropriate for the Legislature to redefine the terms "mental handicap" and "physical handicap" and to include the requirement of reasonable accommodation."

L. 1983. It is codified as subsection (2) of this section for convenience and logical organization.

1983 Regular Session Amendment: In (1) inserted "marital status".

Case Notes

Assignment of Particular Work Position Not Considered Marital or Sex-Plus Discrimination: Three temporary seasonal positions at the Department of Natural Resources and Conservation (DNRC) were eliminated, including Beaver's position, and three permanent seasonal positions were created, including two 8-month positions and one 6-month position. Beaver was given the 6-month position and later sued DNRC for marital and sex-plus discrimination, based in part on the comment by a supervisor that Beaver did not have to worry about getting the 6-month position because she had recently been married and now had a new husband to support her. DNRC contended that the positions were offered based on experience and training, and it was within the discretion of the District Court to determine the credibility of the witnesses and testimony. Although agreeing that the supervisor's statement was highly inappropriate, the Supreme Court nevertheless held that based on the evidence, the employment decision did not involve marital or sex-plus discrimination and that DNRC did not discriminate against Beaver based on marital status. Beaver v. Dept. of Natural Resources and Conservation, 2003 MT 287, 318 M 35, 78 P3d 857 (2003).

Gender — Bona Fide Occupational Qualification for Second School Guidance Counselor Position: Male applicant for school counselor position filed a sex discrimination complaint against school district that chose to consider only female applicants for a second counselor position when first position was already filled by a man. The Montana Human Rights Commission found in petitioner's favor and ordered payment of lost salary. The District Court reversed and ordered the Commission to vacate its findings and dismiss the charge of sex discrimination. The Supreme Court affirmed the District Court order and held that an employer can discriminate on the basis of gender when the reasonable demands of the position require a sex discrimination. The Supreme Court found that there was substantial credible evidence to support the District Court's finding that there was a compelling privacy interest in providing counselors of both sexes; therefore, gender was a bona fide occupational qualification for the position and the school district could discriminate on the basis of gender. Stone v. Belgrade School District, 217 M 309, 703 P2d 136, 41 St. Rep. 2436 (1984).

Jurisdiction to Determine if Employee Benefit Plan Is "Bona Fide": The Human Rights Commission has jurisdiction to determine if the sex-based survivor annuity mortality tables used by the Public Employees' Retirement Board are part of a bona fide employee benefit plan and not a subterfuge to evade the human rights laws. The Board must first exhaust its administrative remedies before it seeks judicial review. St. v. Human Rights Div., 184 M 103, 601 P2d 1190 (1979).

Attorney General's Opinions

Application of Nepotism Law to Rehiring of Tenured Teacher: The nepotism statutes (2-2-301 through 2-2-304) prohibit the rehiring of a tenured teacher if the teacher is within one of the prohibited relationships to a member of the school district board of trustees. The 1985 amendments of 49-2-303(3) and 49-3-201(5) overruled 39 A.G. Op. 67 (1982), insofar as it holds that the nepotism law does not apply to relationships by affinity. 41 A.G. Op. 57 (1986). (But see 1987 amendment to 2-2-302.)

Impliedly Repealed Nepotism Statute Not Revived by 1983 Amendments: The Attorney General issued an opinion (39 A.G. Op. 67 (1982)) that 2-2-302 had been impliedly repealed by the Human Rights Act. The 1983 amendments to the Human Rights Act and the Governmental Code of Fair Practices (which amendments permit assertion of the "reasonable demands" or "bona fide occupational qualification" defense to marital status discrimination) did not revive the impliedly repealed portion of 2-2-302 restricting employment on the basis of affinity. 40 A.G. Op. 40 (1984).

Nepotism Statute Subservient to Human Rights Law: The nepotism law clearly violates the intent of the human rights law because it permits discrimination in employment based solely on marital status. Applying the rule of construction that when two laws are in conflict, the later one supersedes the earlier, the human rights law must prevail. Thus, the Human Rights Act prohibits the Board of Trustees of a school district from enforcing the nepotism statute by refusing employment to a teacher solely on the basis of her relationship by affinity to a Board member. 39 A.G. Op. 67 (1982), overruled by 1985 amendment of this section, as declared by 41 A.G. Op 57 (1986) (see also 1987 amendment to 2-2-302).

1991 Amendment: In (3), after "ruling", deleted "as provided in 49-3-105".

Statement of Intent: The statement of intent attached to Ch. 540, L. 1983, provided: "A statement of intent is required for this bill because it grants rulemaking authority to the Human Rights Commission in section 2 [49-3-106].

The intent of this bill is to eliminate a confusion which now exists between the Human Rights Act and the Governmental Code of Fair Practices by establishing general consistency in the enforcement of these two chapters by the Human Rights Commission. Therefore, it is the intent of the Legislature that the rules adopted by the Commission under the Governmental Code of Fair Practices be modeled after and be as consistent as practicable with the rules adopted by the Commission under the Human Rights Act."

Part Case Notes

Employment Rights Inapplicable to State Prison Inmates: Plaintiffs maintained that while they were male inmates at the state prison, they were employed in various capacities and paid wages substantially less than were paid female inmates for essentially the same jobs. They requested damages, claiming that as male prisoners they were economically discriminated against in favor of female prisoners. They also asked the District Court to describe conditions of work that would alleviate this sexual discrimination in the state prison system. However, the legislature specifically prohibited plaintiffs from receiving the relief they sought by providing that one of the penalties for being a prison inmate is that a prisoner does not have employment rights while serving a sentence in the state prison. The Supreme Court affirmed, holding the plaintiffs were precluded from recovering under both the sex discrimination statutes and the Fair Labor Standards Act. Quigg v. South, 234 M 218, 793 P2d 831, 47 St. Rep. 1176 (1990). See also Worsley v. Lash, 421 F.Supp. 556 (N.D. Ind. 1976).

Case Notes

Plaintiff Subject to McDonnell Douglas Test to Prove Employment Discrimination: Ray argued that his position as department head at Montana Tech of the University of Montana was not renewed because of his environmental activities and criticism of engineering students and also because of his marital status because one of the administrators was opposed to his being married to another member of the faculty. The Commission for Human Rights determined that the university had presented legitimate reasons for the nonrenewal and found for the school. The decision was upheld by the District Court. On appeal, Ray asserted that he was not subject to the McDonnell Douglas test adopted by the Montana Supreme Court in Martinez v. Yellowstone County Welfare Dept., 192 M 42, 626 P2d 242 (1981). The Supreme Court found that Ray had not presented any direct evidence that he was discriminated against based upon his political beliefs or marital status and therefore was subject to the test that provides that a plaintiff, relying on circumstantial evidence, has the initial burden of proving a prima facie case of discrimination. However, if the other party then meets its burden of rebutting the prima facie case, the burden reverts to the plaintiff. The Supreme Court agreed with the Commission for Human Rights that Ray had met the initial burden. However, the Supreme Court ruled that Montana Tech had then met its burden of showing legitimate reasons for the nonrenewal, which were supported by substantial credible evidence. The Supreme Court upheld the Commission's and District Court's findings that Montana Tech had presented reasons for the nonrenewal that were not pretextual, and that shifted the burden back to Ray who had not presented any convincing evidence that the reasons given for the nonrenewal were pretextual. Ray v. Mont. Tech of the Univ. of Mont., 2007 MT 21, 335 M 367, 152 P3d 122 (2007).

Assignment of Particular Work Position Not Considered Marital or Sex-Plus Discrimination: Three temporary seasonal positions at the Department of Natural Resources and Conservation (DNRC) were eliminated, including Beaver's position, and three permanent seasonal positions were created, including two 8-month positions and one 6-month position. Beaver was given the 6-month position and later sued DNRC for marital and sex-plus discrimination, based in part on the comment by a supervisor that Beaver did not have to worry about getting the 6-month position because she had recently been married and now had a new husband to support her. DNRC contended that the positions were offered based on experience and training, and it was within the discretion of the District Court to determine the credibility of the witnesses and testimony. Although agreeing that the supervisor's statement was highly inappropriate, the Supreme Court nevertheless held that based on the evidence, the employment decision did not involve marital or sex-plus discrimination and that DNRC did not discriminate against Beaver based on marital status. Beaver v. Dept. of Natural Resources and Conservation, 2003 MT 287, 318 M 35, 78 P3d 857 (2003).

Single Incident of Sexual Assault — Work Environment That Is Not Subjectively Objectionable Not Considered Type of Hostile Environment to Be Actionable Under Title VII — Standard of Review: Following a single incident of sexual assault by a coworker, Beaver brought a claim against the Department of Natural Resources and Conservation (DNRC) under the Montana governmental code of fair practices; Title 49, ch. 2, commonly known as the Montana Human Rights Act; and Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, asserting that the incident was sufficiently severe or pervasive to alter employment conditions and to create a hostile and abusive working environment. Under Harris v. Forklift Sys., Inc., 510 US 17 (1993), to be sufficiently severe or pervasive to violate Title VII and establish a claim, the misconduct must create a working environment that is both objectively and subjectively offensive and that a reasonable person and the victim perceive as hostile and abusive. The correct legal standard for determining whether an environment is hostile or abusive under Title VII is to review the totality of the circumstances, including: (1) the frequency of the discriminatory conduct; (2) the severity of the conduct, whether it is physically threatening or humiliating or a mere offensive utterance; and (3) whether the conduct interferes with an employee's work performance. Psychological well-being is one factor among many in the determination. Here, the coworker was dismissed following the incident, and Beaver continued working for DNRC, testifying that conditions of employment did not change following the assault. Thus, the District Court correctly concluded that the work environment was not subjectively objectionable to Beaver and that the single incident of sexual assault did not create the type of hostile or abusive environment actionable under Title VII. Beaver v. Dept. of Natural Resources and Conservation, 2003 MT 287, 318 M 35, 78 P3d 857 (2003).

Employment Discrimination Based on Political Beliefs: The Department of Social and Rehabilitation Services (now Department of Public Health and Human Services) did not hire plaintiff because of her support for certain legislation pending before the Legislature. The Supreme Court cited Pickering v. Bd. of Educ., 391 US 563, 20 L Ed 2d 811, 88 S Ct 1731 (1968), in holding that a public employee does not relinquish his first amendment right to comment on matters of public interest by virtue of government employment. Plaintiff's support of proposed legislation was a matter of public concern as to how government should be conducted and thus was an expression of her political ideas or beliefs. Failure to hire her because of those ideas or beliefs constituted illegal discrimination. Taliaferro v. Dept. of Social and Rehabilitation Services, 235 M 23, 764 P2d 860, 45 St. Rep. 2131 (1988).

Motion Not Timely Filed — Intrinsic Fraud Not Grounds for Motion: Appellant asserted sex- or race-based discrimination when the University of Montana (now University of Montana-Missoula) failed to renew her teaching contract. At trial, the head of appellant's department testified that there were no funds available to renew appellant's contract. The District Court determined no unlawful discrimination had occurred. Subsequently, the head of the department pleaded guilty to misuse of federal funds granted to the University and diversion of such funds far in excess of appellant's salary. Appellant filed a motion under former Rule 60, M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), to vacate the judgment on the grounds of fraud. The District Court denied the motion and the Supreme Court affirmed. The Supreme Court found the claim was time-barred under the rule because it was filed after the 60-day time limit. The claim was not allowed under the residual clause in former Rule 60(b), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), because the fraud fell short of what is legally required to vacate a final judgment. The Supreme Court found the misappropriation of funds did not materially and directly affect the outcome of the case and the false in-court testimony was intrinsic fraud upon the court, rather than extrinsic, and therefore did not constitute sufficient grounds to vacate a judgment under the residual clause. Salway v. Arkava, 215 M 135, 695 P2d 1302, 42 St. Rep. 241 (1985).

Mandatory Game Warden Retirement Without Exception or Justification — Impliedly Repealed: Sections 49-2-303 and 49-3-201, making it unlawful for an employer to refuse employment or discriminate against an employee because of his age when the reasonable demands of the position do not require an age distinction and requiring state officials and personnel to recruit, appoint, treat, and promote personnel without regard to age, being later enacted statutes than the provision of 19-8-601 requiring compulsory retirement of game wardens at age 60, impliedly repealed the retirement provision in order to effectuate the clear intent of the Legislature to prevent all age discrimination in employment unless age is related to job performance. The antidiscrimination statutes are very broad prohibitions with very limited exceptions and indicate legislative intent to abolish all discrimination in employment except under the most limited circumstances. Furthermore, there must be justification for any age discrimination to bring it within the purview of a Title 49 exception to the antidiscrimination prohibitions, and the exceptions will be strictly construed. The game warden (now game wardens' and peace officers') retirement statute contains no justification or qualification. Taylor v. Dept. of Fish, Wildlife, & Parks, 205 M 85, 666 P2d 1228, 40 St. Rep. 1112 (1983), distinguished in Ross v. Great Falls, 1998 MT 276, 291 M 377, 967 P2d 1103, 55 St. Rep. 1127 (1998).

Original Action Involving Interpretation of Statute Allowed Without Exhaustion of Administrative Remedies: Game warden mandatorily retired under 19-8-601 lost a complaint proceeding before the Montana Commission for Human Rights, did not pursue further administrative remedies, and brought a District Court action to declare the statute invalid. The exhaustion of administrative remedies doctrine did not preclude redress because: (1) the court action was an original action and not a judicial review of an administrative action, and (2) the Commission ruling was an interpretation of law that must be made by the judiciary. Taylor v. Dept. of Fish, Wildlife, & Parks, 205 M 85, 666 P2d 1228, 40 St. Rep. 1112 (1983).

Valid Reason for Mandatory Retirement — Legislative, Not Judicial Task: Since compulsory game warden (now game wardens' and peace officers') retirement statute contained no qualifications or justification, it would be in excess of the authority of a court hearing a warden's suit challenging the statute's validity to hold a factfinding hearing to determine whether there was a basis for the age discrimination grounded in the reasonable demands of the position. Such a determination is a legislative function; the effort would be great; and the Legislature, not the courts, has the resources for such an undertaking. Taylor v. Dept. of Fish, Wildlife, & Parks, 205 M 85, 666 P2d 1228, 40 St. Rep. 1112 (1983).

Absolute Preference to Minimally Qualified Veterans Required — No Conflict With Other Laws: Where the plaintiff, who had been blind from birth, brought an action against the defendant state library for failing to hire her under 10-2-203 over other more qualified applicants, the District Court did not err in holding that 10-2-203 required an absolute preference for minimally qualified veterans and disabled civilians over other more qualified persons. Neither the language of the statute nor its history contains any qualifications limiting it to a relative preference over only those equally qualified. Nor does the statute conflict with the duties of governmental agencies to offer employment in a nondiscriminatory manner on the basis of merit. The statute is in the nature of an affirmative action program that agencies must implement and maintain in any event and simply requires the preference of veterans and disabled persons of any sex or race. Crabtree v. Mont. St. Library, 204 M 398, 665 P2d 231, 40 St. Rep. 963 (1983).

University Tenure System — Discrimination by Regents or College President Generally — State Action Violating Equal Protection: The Montana University tenure system is maintained under authority of state statutes by the Board of Regents and the presidents of the Montana University System's institutions. Therefore, any action by the Board or a president in regard to tenure is state action, and a discriminatory application of the tenure process would be a denial of equal protection. Akhtar v. Van De Wetering, 197 M 205, 642 P2d 149, 39 St. Rep. 470 (1982).

Evaluations for Teacher Tenure — Equal Protection: The appellant teacher, who was denied tenure, claimed discrimination in that he had published an article and two candidates granted tenure had not published articles. Because the college evaluated tenure candidates in three basic areas, balancing all the factors, there was no equal protection violation. Differences in treatment of persons in regard to promotions do not all constitute deprivation of either due process or equal protection, particularly where the difference is one of evaluating facts rather than in resolving them. Akhtar v. Van De Wetering, 197 M 205, 642 P2d 149, 39 St. Rep. 470 (1982).

Property Interest in Employment Benefit — Attributes: To have a property right or interest in an employment benefit that is entitled to due process protection, one must have more than an abstract need for it and more than a unilateral expectation of it. He must have a legitimate claim of entitlement to it founded, for example, in state law or in rules and understandings between the individual and his employer, and the right or interest must have become vested. Akhtar v. Van De Wetering, 197 M 205, 642 P2d 149, 39 St. Rep. 470 (1982), followed in State ex rel. Scanlon v. Nat'l Ass'n of Ins. Comm'rs, 265 M 184, 875 P2d 340, 51 St. Rep. 480 (1994), and, with respect to award of a public contract, in ISC Distrib., Inc. v. Trevor, 273 M 185, 903 P2d 170, 52 St. Rep. 894 (1995). The attributes of a property interest were also applied in Germann v. Stephens, 2006 MT 130, 332 M 303, 137 P3d 545 (2006).

Property Interest in Teacher Tenure — Codification of Tenure Matters Not Part of Contract: College's codification of rank and tenure matters, specifically drafted to clarify the faculty contract and a college handbook issued to the faculty, was by its nature a pseudoextension of the faculty contract but was not a part of the contract. Therefore, the codification could not be the source for a property interest in teacher tenure to which due process protection would attach. Akhtar v. Van De Wetering, 197 M 205, 642 P2d 149, 39 St. Rep. 470 (1982).

Denial of Teacher Tenure — Due Process Property Right and Liberty Interest: The question of whether due process protections of a teacher denied tenure were violated would not be considered unless he established the existence of a property right or liberty interest that is accorded due process protection. Although denial of tenure would not benefit the teacher in his pursuit of other employment, it did not place such a stigma on him as to deprive him of a liberty interest. Neither did a vested property right protected by due process accrue to the teacher upon his meeting the eligibility for tenure standards of a requisite number of years of teaching and the rank of assistant professor, for beyond that, he was required by college policy to present evidence showing excellence in teaching, research, and public service. Akhtar v. Van De Wetering, 197 M 205, 642 P2d 149, 39 St. Rep. 470 (1982).

Teacher Tenure Actions — Admissibility of Evidence — Decisions as to Other Teachers: Teachers' union member who was denied tenure offered evidence that union member who had resigned from the teachers' negotiating team shortly before he applied for tenure was granted tenure. The offered evidence was refused as irrelevant. On appeal, the Supreme Court stated that the evidence was relevant but affirmed the ruling below, saying that the evidence would only have shown that one union member was granted tenure and another was not. Akhtar v. Van De Wetering, 197 M 205, 642 P2d 149, 39 St. Rep. 470 (1982).

Mandatory Teacher Retirement Impliedly Repealed: In accordance with 20-4-203, the plaintiff, a tenured elementary school principal, received notification that because she was 65 years of age her contract would not be renewed. Because 20-4-203 permitted discrimination based solely on age with no qualifications or justifications bringing it within the limited exceptions of Title 49 and because the mandatory retirement provision bore no relationship to job performance, it was impliedly repealed by the adoption of 49-2-303 and 49-3-201. Dolan v. School District, 195 M 340, 636 P2d 825, 38 St. Rep. 1903 (1981), followed in Kenny v. Bd. of Trustees, 563 F. Supp. 95, 39 St. Rep. 1377 (D.C. Mont. 1982), and distinguished in Ross v. Great Falls, 1998 MT 276, 291 M 377, 967 P2d 1103, 55 St. Rep. 1127 (1998).

"Marital Status" Condition of Employment — Antinepotism Policy Discriminatory: Plaintiffs were employed as administrators in the Harlem schools. Their wives were teachers in the Harlem schools. After the school board adopted a policy that administrators could not have a spouse employed in any capacity in the Harlem school system, the board terminated one plaintiff and reduced the other to a teaching position. The board's policy was discriminatory, as the term "marital status" includes the identity and occupation of one spouse as well as whether one is married, single, widowed, or divorced. Thompson v. School District, 192 M 266, 627 P2d 1229, 38 St. Rep. 706 (1981).

Scienter of Employer Not Necessary: The director of a county welfare department denied the complainant's employment application based upon recommendations of his subordinates. The complainant was not required to prove that the director knew she was black when he denied her application. To require scienter on the part of an employer effectively destroys the rule developed in federal case law that once certain factual elements are proved prima facie, an inference of discrimination is created by law. A requirement of scienter is also contrary to the rationale expressed in Bd. of Trustees v. State ex rel. Bd. of Personnel Appeals, 185 M 89, 604 P2d 770 (1979), that employers relying upon tainted employee evaluations may not insulate themselves from charges of discrimination by claiming a lack of knowledge. Martinez v. Yellowstone County Welfare Dept., 192 M 42, 626 P2d 242, 38 St. Rep. 474 (1981).

Attorney General's Opinions

Application of Nepotism Law to Rehiring of Tenured Teacher: The nepotism statutes (2-2-301 through 2-2-304) prohibit the rehiring of a tenured teacher if the teacher is within one of the prohibited relationships to a member of the school district board of trustees. The 1985 amendments of 49-2-303(3) and 49-3-201(5) overruled 39 A.G. Op. 67 (1982), insofar as it holds that the nepotism law does not apply to relationships by affinity. 41 A.G. Op. 57 (1986). (But see 1987 amendment to 2-2-302.)

Impliedly Repealed Nepotism Statute Not Revived by 1983 Amendments: The Attorney General issued an opinion (39 A.G. Op. 67 (1982)) that 2-2-302 had been impliedly repealed by the Human Rights Act. The 1983 amendments to the Human Rights Act and the Governmental Code of Fair Practices (which amendments permit assertion of the "reasonable demands" or "bona fide occupational qualification" defense to marital status discrimination) did not revive the impliedly repealed portion of 2-2-302 restricting employment on the basis of affinity. 40 A.G. Op. 40 (1984).

Nepotism Statute Subservient to Human Rights Law: The nepotism law clearly violates the intent of the human rights law because it permits discrimination in employment based solely on marital status. Applying the rule of construction that when two laws are in conflict, the later one supersedes the earlier, the human rights law must prevail. Thus, the Human Rights Act prohibits the Board of Trustees of a school district from enforcing the nepotism statute by refusing employment to a teacher solely on the basis of her relationship by affinity to a board member. 39 A.G. Op. 67 (1982), overruled by 1985 amendment of this section, as declared by 41 A.G. Op. 57 (1986) (see also 1987 amendment to 2-2-302).

Case Notes

Failure to Establish Federal or State Claim of Political Discrimination — Petition for Injunction Properly Dismissed: Plaintiffs who were two minor party candidates sued the University System for political discrimination in violation of federal and state law because they were not included in gubernatorial debates on university campuses. The District Court dismissed the petition for failure to state a claim for which relief could be granted, and on appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. A political discrimination claim based on 42 U.S.C. 1983 generally takes the form of deprivation of a property interest in government employment. Plaintiffs made no employment-based discrimination allegations, so that claim failed. Plaintiffs' political discrimination claim based on 42 U.S.C. 1985 was in the form of a common-law conspiracy, and to prove conspiracy under that section, a plaintiff must show that some racial or perhaps otherwise class-based, invidiously discriminatory animus lay behind the conspirator's action and that the conspiracy was aimed at interfering with the plaintiff's private and publicly protected rights. Plaintiffs could not show that they were members of a suspect class. A common-law conspiracy occurs in Montana when two or more persons, by some concerted action, intend to accomplish some unlawful objective for the purpose of harming another that results in damage, and it is not the conspiracy itself but torts committed or wrongs done in furtherance of the conspiracy that give rise to a claim. Even when viewed in a light most favorable to plaintiffs, in this case, the asserted facts would at most only breed a suspicion that plaintiffs might have had a right to relief, so that federal claim failed as well. Plaintiffs' state law claim under this section was denied because plaintiffs failed to exhaust administrative remedies prior to filing suit in District Court. Absent viable federal or state discrimination claims, the District Court properly dismissed plaintiffs' petition for injunctive relief. Jones v. Mont. Univ. Sys., 2007 MT 82, 337 M 1, 155 P3d 1247 (2007).

No Standing to Bring Political Discrimination Claim on Behalf of Others: Plaintiffs who were two minor party candidates sued the University System for political discrimination because they were not included in gubernatorial debates on university campuses. The claim was brought on behalf of "91,989 Montana hungry unregistered minors". The Supreme Court addressed the standing claim sua sponte. The general rule is that a litigant may assert only the litigant's own constitutional rights or immunities and must demonstrate a personal stake in the controversy and some injury that would be alleviated successfully by maintaining the action. Here, the alleged hungry minors possessed neither a stake in the outcome of plaintiffs' asserted civil rights violations nor suffered any injury that plaintiffs' complaint would alleviate, and plaintiffs were prohibited by the general rule from asserting constitutional rights on behalf of others. Jones v. Mont. Univ. Sys., 2007 MT 82, 337 M 1, 155 P3d 1247 (2007).

Municipal Authority to Set Water and Sewer Service Rates — Applicability of Human Rights Act to Setting of Water and Sewer Rates: A provision in 7-13-4304 provides that the rates for municipal water and sewer charges may be fixed in advance and must be uniform for like services in all parts of the municipality. The city of Bozeman sought to provide discounts or preferential rates to senior citizens on water and wastewater charges. The question was whether the senior rates violated the statutory requirement for uniform or equitable rates. The Attorney General held that because water and sewer ratemaking is not an area affirmatively subject to state control, a local government with self-government powers may set rates for those services without regard to the requirements of 7-13-4304. However, the Attorney General noted that age discrimination does violate Title 49, ch. 2, commonly known as the Montana Human Rights Act, that Bozeman is subject to the Act despite its status as a self-governing municipality, and that discrimination in government services is affirmatively subject to state control. Without deciding whether Bozeman's proposed ordinance would meet the standard of strict construction of reasonable grounds based on age, the Attorney General nevertheless concluded that 49-2-308 of the Act did apply to the Bozeman ordinance setting senior rates for municipal water and sewer services. 50 A.G. Appointment of Thirty-Nine-Year-Old Part-Paid Firefighter to Full-Time Position Not Statutory Violation: Before Link was 34 years old, he was a part-paid firefighter and member of the Firefighters' Unified Retirement System (FURS). At age 39, he applied for a position as full-time firefighter. Despite the recommendation of the fire chief, who was granted authority pursuant to city ordinances and personnel rules to make appointments of part-paid firefighters, Link's appointment was denied by City Council members who feared a violation of 7-33-4107, which states that firefighters may not be more than 34 years of age at the time of original appointment. Link complained in District Court that the city discriminated against him on the basis of age. Relying on the language of 7-33-4106, the District Court granted summary judgment to the city, reasoning that because the Mayor and City Council did not have input into Link's appointment as a part-paid firefighter, his appointment to that position was not an original appointment under 7-33-4107. The Supreme Court reversed, holding that having delegated its authority to appoint part-paid firefighters, the city was now estopped from denying the validity of that delegation of authority. Noting a Montana Human Rights Commission decision in Elliott v. Helena, Cause No. 8701003108 (1989), that original appointment includes appointment as a part-time volunteer firefighter and that participation in FURS indicates a legislative intent that the maximum age provision apply to part-paid as well as full-time firefighters, the Supreme Court found that the narrow interpretation given to 7-33-4107 by the District Court resulted in the likelihood that the statute would violate age discrimination laws. RIGHTS OF PERSONS WITH DISABILITIES

Chapter Compiler's Comments

Preamble: The preamble attached to Ch. 407, L. 1993, provided: "WHEREAS, many individuals with disabilities and many organizations representing individuals with disabilities object to the use of the terms "handicap" and "handicapped person"; and

WHEREAS, as with racial and ethnic terms, the choice of words used to describe a person with a disability is overlaid with stereotypes and emotional connotations; and

WHEREAS, it is important to use terminology most in line with the sensibilities of most persons with disabilities; and

WHEREAS, the current accepted terminology is "disability" rather than "handicap" and "person with a disability" rather than "handicapped person"; and

WHEREAS, the federal Americans with Disabilities Act of 1990 uses the terms "disability" and "individual with a disability" rather than the terms "handicap" or "handicapped person"; and

WHEREAS, making the state human rights laws consistent with the Americans with Disabilities Act will eliminate some confusion between state and federal laws.

THEREFORE, it is appropriate for the Legislature to revise the state human rights laws to replace the terms "handicap" and "handicapped person" with the terms "disability" and "person with a disability"."

Case Notes

Temporary, Nonchronic Condition Not Considered Disability — Human Rights Act Claim Properly Dismissed: Adamson injured his shoulder off the job and was allowed to return to work with lifting restrictions, but the County Commission denied reinstatement to his former job. Adamson returned to work after 6 months with no restrictions, underwent surgery 3 months later, and was released to work 1 month later with restrictions, but again the County Commission denied his request to return to work until he had no restrictions. Adamson ultimately returned to work with a full release and worked until retirement, but subsequently filed a complaint with the Commission for Human Rights, claiming financial loss because of discrimination by the County Commission for his temporary disabilities. A hearings examiner and the Commission held for the county, and the District Court affirmed the decision after finding that Adamson was not disabled pursuant to Title 49, ch. 2, commonly known as the Montana Human Rights Act. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. Noting that the determination of a disability is made on a case-by-case basis, the Supreme Court held that Adamson's temporary, nonchronic impairment of short duration, with little or no long-term permanent impact, was not a disability as defined in 49-2-303. Other similar impairments not considered to be disabilities may include but are not limited to broken hips, sprained joints, concussions, appendicitis, and influenza (see the interpretive guidelines in 29 CFR 1630.2(j)). Adamson v. Pondera County, 2004 MT 27, 319 M 378, 84 P3d 1048 (2004), distinguishing Martinell v. Mont. Power Co., 268 M 292, 886 P2d 421 (1994), and Butterfield v. Sidney Pub. Schools, 2001 MT 177, 306 M 179, 32 P3d 1243 (2001).

Mixed Motive Analysis Applicable When Parties Disagree on Reason for Refusing to Hire: Laudert suffered liver failure while employed by the Richland County Sheriff's Department (RCSD) and had to resign. Following Laudert's full recovery, his former position came open again and he applied but was not rehired. He filed a discrimination charge on grounds of age and disability. The hearings examiner found that questions asked by the RCSD interview panel constituted direct evidence that RCSD had unlawfully considered Laudert's disability, but did not award damages because Laudert would not have been hired even in the absence of any unlawful consideration of his disability. RCSD maintained that Laudert was not hired because of his employment history. The hearings examiner determined that this was a "mixed motive" case. On review, the District Court concluded that European Health Spa v. Human Rights Comm'n, 212 M 319, 687 P2d 1029 (1984), precluded it from applying the mixed motive approach, so the court instead applied the burden-shifting approach in McDonnell Douglas Corp. v. Green, 411 US 792 (1973). However, the McDonnell Douglas test applies to claims involving circumstantial evidence of unlawful discrimination or pretext, while in this case, Laudert presented direct evidence of discrimination, rendering the McDonnell Douglas test inapplicable under Trans World Airlines, Inc. v. Thurston, 469 US 111 (1985). On appeal, Laudert maintained that Reeves v. Dairy Queen, 1998 MT 13, 287 M 196, 953 P2d 703 (1998), should apply because that decision stated that when discrimination is proved by direct evidence, the employer must prove by a preponderance of the evidence that an unlawful motive played no role in the challenged action or that the direct evidence was not credible. However, the Reeves approach was not directly on point either, because Reeves pertains only to instances in which the parties do not dispute the employer's reasons for the challenged action. The Supreme Court held that the District Court should have applied the mixed motive analysis contained in Price Waterhouse v. Hopkins, 490 US 228 (1989), as suggested by the hearings examiner. Laudert v. Richland County Sheriff's Dept., 2000 MT 218, 301 M 114, 7 P3d 386, 57 St. Rep. 872 (2000).

Direct Evidence of Discriminatory Intent — Standard of Proof — Heiat Criteria Applicable to Cases Involving Circumstantial Evidence: The summary judgment burdens of proof discussed in Heiat v. E. Mont. College, 275 M 322, 912 P2d 787 (1996), are not limited only to cases of sex discrimination brought under federal law, but rather apply in all types of discrimination cases whether based on federal or state law. However, the Heiat test is confined to use in cases in which discriminatory intent can only be proved by circumstantial evidence. In a direct evidence case, one in which the parties do not dispute the reason for the employer's action but only whether that action is illegal discrimination, the standard is that the employer must prove by a preponderance of the evidence that an unlawful motive played no role in the challenged action or that the direct evidence of discrimination is not credible and is unworthy of belief. That method of proof, as set out in ARM 24.9.610(5), is the proper test in cases in which the plaintiff presents direct evidence of discrimination. Traditional summary judgment principles apply to direct evidence discrimination cases, requiring the moving party to establish that no material issues of fact exist and that the movant is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. If the employer is the moving party, the employer has the burden of showing that no issues of material fact remain and that plaintiff cannot prove a prima facie case of discrimination as a matter of law. Reeves v. Dairy Queen, Inc., 1998 MT 13, 287 M 196, 953 P2d 703, 55 St. Rep. 44 (1998), clarified and followed in Hafner v. Conoco, Inc., 1999 MT 68, 293 M 542, 977 P2d 330, 56 St. Rep. 277 (1999).

Disability Determination on Case-by-Case Basis — High Blood Pressure as Disability: Whether a person is disabled under Title 49, ch. 2, commonly known as the Montana Human Rights Act, cannot be decided as a matter of law, but rather requires a factual determination to be made on a case-by-case basis. Under this section, to establish a prima facie case of discrimination in employment, an employee must show that the employee belonged to a protected class, that the employee was otherwise qualified for continued employment and that the employment did not subject the employee or others to physical harm, and that continued employment was denied because of the employee's disability. A person is entitled to the protections of the Act not only if the person suffers from a substantially limiting impairment, but also if the person suffers from a condition that is regarded as such an impairment. High blood pressure is an example of a perceived disability. It is no more legal to discriminate against one who exhibits symptoms of a disease than to discriminate against one who suffers from the disease itself. In this case, Reeves was terminated because, in the employer's own words, "it was a combination of having high blood pressure and working in a position as a fast order cook working under conditions of pressure, stress and heat . . . and I decided this would be best for Donna". Reeves met the test for proving a prima facie case under this section. The District Court erred in summarily dismissing Reeves' claim, and the case was remanded for further proceedings. Reeves v. Dairy Queen, Inc., 1998 MT 13, 287 M 196, 953 P2d 703, 55 St. Rep. 44 (1998).

Risk of Future Injury as Nondiscriminatory Reason for Precluding Employment — Mantolete Standard: After plaintiff establishes a prima facie case of employment discrimination, the burden shifts to the employer to rebut the presumption of discrimination by producing a legitimate, nondiscriminatory reason for failure to hire. In Mantolete v. Bolger, 767 F2d 1416

(9th Cir. 1985), cited with approval in Hearing Aid Institute v. Rasmussen, 258 M 367, 852 P2d 628 (1993), the level to which risk of future injury must rise in order to stand as a nondiscriminatory reason disqualifying an applicant from employment must be based on a showing of a reasonable probability of substantial harm. The Supreme Court declined to cite the Mantolete standard as controlling because of the argument that any progressive condition may subject an employee to potential physical harm. However, the court agreed that the Mantolete standard provided useful guidance in relation to pretext. Because plaintiff established a genuine issue of material fact as to whether the employer's withdrawal of a job offer was pretextual, summary dismissal of the discrimination complaint constituted reversible error. Hafner v. Conoco, Inc., 268 M 396, 886 P2d 947, 51 St. Rep. 1391 (1994). Hafner having proved pretext under Hafner I, ibid., the burden then shifted to Conoco to prove absence of unlawful motive under the test in Reeves v. Dairy Queen, Inc., 1998 MT 13, 287 M 196, 953 P2d 703 (1998). In light of Reeves, the Supreme Court nevertheless applied the Mantolete standard, holding that when an employer defends an employment discrimination case by asserting risk of harm, the employer has a duty to independently assess that risk in accordance with ARM 24.9.606(8), regardless of whether the case arises under the McDonnell or Reeves burden-shifting tests and whether the alleged risk of harm is directed to the employee's initial qualifications or the existence of reasonable qualifications. In determining whether an employer has discharged its duty in this regard, a District Court must make specific findings concerning with whom the employer spoke about the risk of substantial harm and whether the employer took into account all relevant information concerning the risk of harm, including: (1) the seriousness of the employee's injury; (2) the employee's work history; (3) the employee's medical history; and (4) the existence of reasonable accommodations that could possibly reduce the risk of substantial harm to the employee. Failure to make specific findings constituted reversible error. Hafner v. Conoco, Inc., 1999 MT 68, 293 M 542, 977 P2d 330, 56 St. Rep. 277 (1999).

Case Notes

Commission for Human Rights Discretion to Award Compensatory Damages in Mixed Motives Cases: Laudert suffered liver failure while employed by the Richland County Sheriff's Department (RCSD) and had to resign. Following Laudert's full recovery, his former position came open again and he applied but was not rehired. He filed a discrimination charge on grounds of age and disability. The hearings examiner found that questions asked by the RCSD interview panel constituted direct evidence that RCSD had unlawfully considered Laudert's disability, but did not award damages because Laudert would not have been hired even in the absence of any unlawful consideration of his disability. RCSD maintained that Laudert was not hired because of his employment history. The hearings examiner properly determined that this was a "mixed motive" case. Whether Laudert was entitled to compensatory damages depended on whether RCSD proved by a preponderance of the evidence that it would have made the same decision in the absence of Laudert's disability, and Laudert's employment history provided substantial evidence proving that Laudert would not have been hired in any event. The Supreme Court found that the hearings examiner properly exercised the statutory discretion to preclude damages, and the court affirmed the authority of the Commission for Human Rights to limit compensatory damages in mixed motive cases pursuant to ARM 24.9.611 and Price Waterhouse v. Hopkins, 490 US 228 (1989). Laudert v. Richland County Sheriff's Dept., 2000 MT 218, 301 M 114, 7 P3d 386, 57 St. Rep. 872 (2000).

Chapter 489 in (2), at beginning after "vehicle", deleted "other than one lawfully displaying a parking permit issued under this part or one displaying a distinguishing license plate or placard for a person with a disability that was issued by a foreign jurisdiction conferring the same parking privileges as conferred in subsection (1) and conveying a person with a disability or one displaying a specially inscribed license plate issued under 61-3-332(10(c)(i)(A) and conveying a 100% disabled veteran"; inserted (2)(a) and (2)(b) allowing parking of a vehicle with a lawful Montana disability plate, a similar valid plate from a foreign jurisdiction, or a specially inscribed plate; in (3), near middle of introductory clause after "61-3-332(10)(c)(i)(A)", inserted "or 61-3-426(2)"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective January 1, 1996.

1993 Amendments: Chapter 209 in (2) and (3) substituted "61-3-332(10)(c)(i)(A)" for "61-3-332(10)(c)". Amendment effective January 1, 1994.

Chapter 406 in (4)(d), at end of first sentence, inserted "and stating the penalty for a violation" and inserted second sentence providing that signs existing as of October 1, 1993, may meet this requirement with a decal; and made minor changes in style.

Chapter 407 throughout section substituted references to a person with a disability for references to a handicapped person; and made minor changes in style.

1991 Amendment: In (2) and (3) substituted "61-3-332(10)(c)" for "61-3-451".

1987 Amendment: In (1), after "public property or", deleted "upon the request of the private property owner"; and in (4), in opening clause, inserted "In accordance with subsection (2)", after "county" inserted "or appropriate state agency", and at end substituted "or permitholders on ways of this state open to the public as defined in 61-8-101" for "on public or private property in accordance with subsection (2)".

1985 Amendments: Chapter 71 near middle of (2) inserted "or one displaying a specially inscribed license plate issued under 61-3-451 and conveying a 100% disabled veteran"; and near middle of (3) inserted "and vehicles lawfully displaying specially inscribed license plates issued under 61-3-451".

Chapter 203 near beginning of (2) inserted "or one displaying a distinguishing handicapped person's license plate or placard issued by a foreign jurisdiction conferring the same parking privileges as conferred in subsection (1)".

Chapter 616 inserted (4) permitting governing body of city, town, or county to impose requirements for special parking spaces constructed after September 30, 1985, and reserved for handicapped persons on public or private property.

1983 Amendment: In (1) after "handicapped persons", inserted remainder of subsection entitling permittee to park in special parking space reserved for handicapped persons whether on public property or, upon the request of the private property owner, on private property available for public use; inserted (2) prohibiting vehicle not displaying special parking permit from parking in space on public or private property marked by official sign as reserved for use by handicapped persons; and inserted (3) authorizing city, town, or county to exempt, with some exceptions, vehicles displaying special parking permits parked in public places along public streets from parking time limitations.

Source: Subsection 3, as inserted by sec. 2, Ch. 614, L. 1983, is based on Colo. Rev. Stat. 1973, sec. 42-4-1109.

Attorney General's Opinions

Private Property Owner's Request to Be Directed to Local Governing Body: Because the phrase "upon the request of the private property owner" is unclear, to ascertain the meaning of the phrase, the legislative history of this section must be examined. The legislative history indicates that the Legislature intended a request by a private property owner to be made to the governing body of the local government unit, which would include a county, city, or town. 40 A.G. Op. 34 (1984).

Municipality Possesses Enforcement Powers Without Enactment of Local Implementing Ordinances: Section 49-4-307 provides that it is a misdemeanor to violate this section's provision that "no vehicle other than one lawfully displaying a parking permit issued under this part and conveying a handicapped person may be parked in a parking space on public or private property that is clearly identified by an official sign as being reserved for use by handicapped persons". (See 1995 amendment.) Therefore, municipal police officers are obligated to enforce this section on both public property and private property available for public use within their territorial jurisdiction. Further, no municipal ordinance is required to implement such enforcement powers. 40 A.G. Op. 34 (1984).

49-4-303. Issuance of interim special parking permit.

Compiler's Comments

2005 Amendment: Chapter 596 substituted current text concerning issuance of interim special parking permit for former text that read: "(1) Applications for a special parking permit may be made to the department of justice on forms provided by the department that require sufficient information to determine eligibility for a permit. The application must be accompanied by:

(a) a certificate from a licensed physician, a licensed chiropractor, or a licensed advanced practice registered nurse, as provided in 37-8-202, describing the extent of the applicant's disability; and

(b) a fee of $1.

(2) Applications must be available at the office of the county treasurer in each county and directly from the department." Amendment effective January 1, 2006.

1999 Amendment: Chapter 156 in (1)(a) inserted reference to licensed advanced practice registered nurse; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective March 23, 1999.

1997 Amendment: Chapter 280 in (1)(a), after "physician", inserted "or a licensed chiropractor"; and made minor changes in style.

Code Commissioner Correction: The Code Commissioner has substituted the department of justice for the division of motor vehicles in this section, because sec. 14, Ch. 503, L. 1985, repealed 2-15-2002, which had statutorily created the division, and sec. 1, Ch. 503 amended Title 61, Motor Vehicles, to substitute "department" for "division" throughout that title. The apparent intent was to eliminate the statutory status of the division, and therefore the Code Commissioner has changed statutory references accordingly (see 1-11-101(2)(g)).

49-4-304. Special license plate or card to be provided and displayed — additional cards allowed for owners of more than one vehicle.

Compiler's Comments

2009 Amendment: Chapter 233 in (1) in first sentence before "indicating" substituted "61-3-458(4)(b) or (4)(i)" for "61-3-458(3)(b) or (3)(i)". Amendment effective January 1, 2010.

2007 Amendment: Chapter 59 in (1) near middle of first sentence after "61-3-458(3)(b)" inserted "or (3)(i)". Amendment effective October 1, 2007.

2005 Amendment: Chapter 596 in (1) in first sentence at beginning inserted exception clause and near middle substituted "61-3-332(9)" for "61-3-332(11)"; in (3) near beginning substituted "49-4-301" for "49-4-303"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective January 1, 2006.

2003 Amendment: Chapter 399 in (1) substituted "Unless the department of justice issued a special license plate under 61-3-332(11) or 61-3-458(3)(b) indicating a special parking privilege, the department shall provide a card" for "The department of justice shall provide a special license plate under 61-3-332(10)(g) or 61-3-426(1) or a card". Amendment effective January 1, 2004.

Preamble: The preamble attached to Ch. 399, L. 2003, provided: "WHEREAS, the State Administration and Veterans' Affairs Interim Committee (SAIC) closely examined property tax, vehicle registration, and special license plate benefits available to veterans or their surviving spouses; and

WHEREAS, the SAIC finds that state statutory language providing disabled veterans with certain benefits based on a 100% disability rating from the U.S. Department of Veterans Affairs needs to be updated to account for veterans with less than a 100% disability rating but entitled to receive compensation at the 100% disability rate; and

WHEREAS, veterans and surviving spouses have requested closer parity between the vehicle registration and special license plate benefits available to various classes of veterans and inclusion of the surviving spouses of veterans killed while on active duty or who died as a result of a service-connected disability; and

WHEREAS, statutory provisions related to vehicle registration and special license plate fees should be simplified to the extent possible to streamline administration and address various other disparities."

1995 Amendment: Chapter 489 in (1), in first sentence after "61-3-332", substituted "(10)(g) or 61-3-426(1)" for "(10)(f)". Amendment effective January 1, 1996.

1993 Amendment: Chapter 407 throughout section substituted references to a person with a disability for references to a handicapped person; and made minor changes in style.

1991 Amendments: Chapter 456 inserted (2) requiring Department to issue additional parking privilege display cards to eligible handicapped person who owns more than one vehicle.

Chapter 724 in (1) substituted "61-3-332(10)(f)" for "61-3-445".

1985 Amendment: In (1) near beginning of first sentence, after "plate", inserted "under 61-3-445"; and in (3) after "The", deleted "special license plate or".

Code Commissioner Correction: The Code Commissioner has substituted the department of justice for the division of motor vehicles in this section, because sec. 14, Ch. 503, L. 1985, repealed 2-15-2002, which had statutorily created the division, and sec. 1, Ch. 503 amended Title 61, Motor Vehicles, to substitute "department" for "division" throughout that title. The apparent intent was to eliminate the statutory status of the division, and therefore the Code Commissioner has changed statutory references accordingly (see 1-11-101(2)(g)).

1983 Amendment: In (1), in first sentence inserted "special license" and changed "may be" to "to be", in second sentence required that the "special license plate shall be affixed to the vehicle according to 61-3-301" and at end inserted "by the handicapped person in a vehicle other than the one to which his special license plate is affixed", and changed phraseology; inserted (2) allowing handicapped person not holding driver's license or owning vehicle to apply to Division for card to be displayed in the windshield of conveying vehicle when special parking privilege is used; and inserted (3) requiring special license plate or card to bear wheelchair as symbol of handicapped person.

49-4-305. Expiration of permit.

Compiler's Comments

2005 Amendment: Chapter 596 in (1) in exception clause inserted reference to 49-4-303 and before "permit" inserted "special parking"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective January 1, 2006.

1999 Amendment: Chapter 156 throughout section inserted references to licensed advanced practice registered nurse; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective March 23, 1999.

1997 Amendment: Chapter 280 in first sentence in (1)(a), in (1)(b), and in (2)(b), after "physician", inserted "or a licensed chiropractor".

1995 Amendment: Chapter 392 in (1)(a), at beginning of first sentence, substituted "3 years" for "4 years" and after "issuance" inserted "unless the permit was issued to a person who has a condition expected to improve within 6 months" and at beginning of second sentence substituted "person" for "permittee", before "physician" inserted "licensed", and after "certifies" substituted "that the person's mobility disability still exists and that one of the criteria specified in 49-4-301 continues to be met" for "that the permittee's disability impairing mobility still exists"; in (1)(b), before "physician", inserted "licensed" and after "physician" substituted "that the person's mobility disability no longer exists or that the criteria specified in 49-4-301 can no longer be met" for "that the permittee's disability impairing mobility no longer exists"; and in (2)(b), before "physician", inserted "licensed" and after "physician" substituted "that the person's mobility disability no longer exists or that the criteria specified in 49-4-301 can no longer be met" for "that the permittee's disability impairing mobility no longer exists".

1993 Amendments — Composite Section: Chapter 406 inserted (1), (1)(a), and (1)(b) providing that except as provided in subsection (2), a permit expires 4 years after its issuance or on certification by a doctor that the disability no longer exists and that a permittee may renew a permit if a doctor certifies that the disability still exists; in (1)(a) substituted "disability" for "physical handicap"; and inserted (2) concerning applicability to permits issued before October 1, 1993.

Chapter 407 in (2)(b) substituted "disability" for "handicap"; and made minor changes in style. This amendment was rendered void by the amendment in Ch. 406.

1983 Amendment: Substituted (1), death of permittee, and (2), certification by a physician that physical handicap impairing mobility no longer exists, for "December 31 of the year of issue" as expiration date of special parking permit.

49-4-306. Department of justice to publicize permit.

Compiler's Comments

Code Commissioner Correction: The Code Commissioner has substituted the department of justice for the division of motor vehicles in this section, because sec. 14, Ch. 503, L. 1985, repealed 2-15-2002, which had statutorily created the division, and sec. 1, Ch. 503 amended Title 61, Motor Vehicles, to substitute "department" for "division" throughout that title. The apparent intent was to eliminate the statutory status of the division, and therefore the Code Commissioner has changed statutory references accordingly (see 1-11-101(2)(g)).

49-4-307. Penalty.

Compiler's Comments

1993 Amendment: Chapter 406 increased penalty from $50 to $100; and made minor changes in style.

1987 Amendment: Changed fine from "not less than $10 or more than $100" to "$50" and inserted second sentence providing an exception to conviction for illegally parking in special parking space if within 24 hours person charged produces a special parking permit issued and valid at time of arrest.

Attorney General's Opinions

Municipality Possesses Enforcement Powers Without Enactment of Local Implementing Ordinances: This section provides that it is a misdemeanor to violate the provision in 49-4-302 that "no vehicle other than one lawfully displaying a parking permit issued under this part and conveying a handicapped person may be parked in a parking space on public or private property that is clearly identified by an official sign as being reserved for use by handicapped persons". (See 1995 amendment to 49-4-302.) Therefore, municipal police officers are obligated to enforce this section on both public property and private property available for public use within their territorial jurisdiction. Further, no municipal ordinance is required to implement such enforcement powers. 40 A.G. Op. 34 (1984).

Case Notes

Applicable Statutory Scheme for Providing Interpreter for Deaf Person in Criminal Proceeding — Payment of Interpreter's Fees: Alkire was arrested and charged in Municipal Court for criminal trespass to vehicles and was assigned representation by the Office of State Public Defender (OSPD). Because Alkire was hearing impaired, he requested and was granted a team of interpreters. A question then arose regarding whether the OSPD or the county was responsible for costs associated with the appointment of the team of interpreters. The court determined that, pursuant to 47-1-201, the OSPD was responsible for the costs. Alkire contended that 49-4-503 provided that the court was required to bear the costs. On a writ of supervisory control, the Supreme Court considered two possible statutory schemes for determining the entity responsible for the costs. Scheme no. 1 provides interpreters for the deaf in official proceedings pursuant to Title 49, ch. 4, part 5, and 49-4-509 requires the court to pay, from the county general fund, reasonable compensation for services plus travel and transportation expenses for an interpreter who is appointed in a criminal proceeding. Scheme no. 2 arises from a combination of Title 26, ch. 2, part 5, 46-15-116, and 47-1-201, and requires payment by the OSPD for witness and interpreter fees, including interpreter fees in a criminal proceeding. The Supreme Court concluded that scheme no. 1 was more specific because it pertained to providing an interpreter for a deaf person in a criminal proceeding, while scheme no. 2 was more general and pertained to the appointment of interpreters and translators generally and who are treated as witnesses. In this case, the more specific statutory scheme no. 1 for an interpreter for Alkire in the criminal proceeding prevailed over the general provisions of scheme no. 2, so the trial court erred in requiring that the OSPD bear the costs of the interpreters. Thus, the writ of supervisory control was granted, and the case was remanded to Municipal Court for further proceedings directing that the costs of the interpreters be paid from the county fund. 2007 Amendment: Chapter 150 in introductory clause inserted reference to chapter 2; inserted definitions of condition of public health importance, institutional controls, local board of health, local health officer, local public health agency, physician, public health services and functions, public health system, screening, and testing; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective October 1, 2007.

2003 Amendment: Chapter 391 substituted definition of communicable disease for former definition that read: ""Communicable disease" means a disease designated communicable by the department"; and inserted definitions of inanimate reservoir, isolation, and quarantine. Amendment effective April 17, 2003.

1995 Amendments — Composite Section: Chapter 418 in definition of Board substituted "board of public health" for "board of health and environmental sciences"; and in definition of Department substituted "department of public health" for "department of health and environmental sciences". Amendment effective July 1, 1995.

Chapter 546 deleted definition of Board that read: ""Board" means the board of health and environmental sciences, provided for in 2-15-2104"; in definition of Department substituted "department of public health and human services provided for in 2-15-2201" for "department of health and environmental sciences provided for in Title 2, chapter 15, part 21"; and made minor changes in style. WHEREAS, these individuals, and many more, either now or in the future will need assistance both with paying medical expenses that are not covered by insurance and in meeting their own basic human needs due to the debilitating nature of asbestos-related diseases; and

WHEREAS, by providing case management and personal care assistance, many of these individuals will better utilize federal and private health care and social programs and be able to remain in their homes, creating savings to the state and county; and

WHEREAS, these individuals suffer from asbestos-related negative health impacts through no fault of their own; and

WHEREAS, there is still no permanent source of funding for medical and psychosocial care for Lincoln County asbestos patients, as the medical plan currently funded by W.R. Grace is voluntary and unregulated and federal grant funding that is currently paying for asbestos patient services is unlikely to be renewed; and

WHEREAS, there is currently no cure for either asbestosis or mesothelioma, and it is likely that autoimmune diseases, including rheumatoid arthritis and lupus, will be found to be linked to tremolite asbestos exposure, and there is no cure for these diseases either; and

WHEREAS, the unmet medical and social needs of asbestos patients in Lincoln County are disproportionate to the community's size and ability to meet these needs from county funds."

Preamble: The preamble attached to Ch. 300, L. 2013, provided: "WHEREAS, current Montana law contains a complex food code with jurisdiction spread between multiple departments and levels of government; and

WHEREAS, there is a growing movement to support locally sourced and community-based food production, sometimes referred to as "cottage food", which benefits local communities, small businesses, public health, and environmental sustainability; and

WHEREAS, numerous states have passed laws that allow small business entrepreneurs to use their home kitchens to prepare for sale foods that are not potentially hazardous, while Montana has not; and

WHEREAS, new federal rules and regulations under the Food Safety Modernization Act will require updates to Montana food safety laws."

Montana Food Policy Modernization Project — Guidelines: Section 1, Ch. 300, L. 2013, required the departments of public health and human services, agriculture, and livestock to coordinate and conduct a project to assess Montana's food laws and develop a report for the economic affairs interim committee, including any proposed legislation for the 2015 legislature. Chapter 300 was effective April 25, 2013, and terminates June 30, 2014, or upon completion of the duties described in the chapter, whichever occurs first.

Preamble: The preamble attached to Ch. 415, L. 2009, provided: "WHEREAS, Montana law gives local public health agencies the authority and responsibility to undertake efforts to protect the public health and educate the public on health-related issues; and

WHEREAS, funding for local public health agencies varies widely across the state because of variations in local funding resources; and

WHEREAS, the National Association of County and City Health Officials, American Public Health Association, National Association of Local Boards of Health, and Association of State and Territorial Health Officials recognize that local public health agencies across the country are served by a system unique to each agency based on available financial, medical, and other resources; and

WHEREAS, these national public health organizations are developing a national accreditation program to guide the basic activities that local public health agencies should carry out regardless of the makeup of their local health systems."

Pilot Project for Implementing National Public Health Standards: Section 1, Ch. 415, L. 2009, provided: "(1) Subject to available funding, the department of public health and human services shall administer a pilot project to assist local public health agencies, as defined in 50-1-101, with preparing for national accreditation by using nationally recognized public health standards and guidelines that are based on the 10 essential public health services as outlined by the national association of county and city health officials, the centers for disease control and prevention, the public health accreditation board, and other national public health organizations. The public health standards and guidelines include but are not limited to the operational definition of a functional local health department and the national public health performance standards.

(2) The department shall:

(a) develop grant application and review criteria in accordance with this section;

(b) establish protocol, policy, goals, strategies, and timelines for the local public health agencies selected for the pilot project;

(c) establish evaluation criteria for the pilot project;

(d) provide materials and training to pilot project counties; and

(e) complete and submit a final report to the 2011 legislature as provided in 5-11-210.

(3) To the extent that it receives applications that meet grant review criteria established by the department in accordance with this section, the department shall award grants to eight local public health agencies, including a tribal health department. The grant awards must be made, in consultation with the public health system improvement task force established by the department, to:

(a) two local public health agencies in counties with populations of 40,000 or more residents;

(b) one local public health agency in a county with a population of between 20,000 and 40,000 residents;

(c) two local public health agencies in counties with populations of 5,000 to 20,000 residents; and

(d) three local public health agencies in counties with populations of fewer than 5,000 residents.

(4) A local public health agency selected for a grant shall demonstrate, through the application process, how it will use the funds to:

(a) prepare for national accreditation using the types of nationally recognized public health guidelines and standards described in subsection (1);

(b) effectively participate in a self-assessment of the local public health agency's capacity to deliver the 10 essential public health services as outlined in the nationally recognized public health guidelines and standards described in subsection (1);

(c) work with the department and the public health system improvement task force to ensure proper use of the grant, including participation in a process to evaluate the pilot project efforts; and

(d) complete measurement criteria established by the department and the public health system improvement task force.

(5) The department and the public health system improvement task force shall:

(a) serve as a resource for the local public health agencies selected for the pilot project as they prepare for national accreditation using nationally recognized public health standards and guidelines as described in subsection (1). In this capacity, the task force shall participate in:

(i) regularly scheduled conference calls; and

(ii) at least two meetings a year that are held in one of the counties in which the pilot project agencies are located;

(b) ensure that the technical assistance and training needs of the pilot project agencies are met; and

(c) assess the results of the pilot project.

(6) The public health system improvement task force and the pilot project agencies shall report the following information to the appropriate interim committees of the legislature by September 15, 2010:

(a) the estimated costs of becoming accredited agencies through the national accreditation program, based on their experiences in the pilot project, including information that explains how the costs were determined;

(b) their assessments of the ability of Montana's local public health agencies serving jurisdictions with varying population sizes in becoming accredited agencies through the national accreditation program, including funding and other resource management issues and challenges they encountered;

(c) suggestions for preparing local public health agencies for national accreditation that are relevant to the populations each pilot project agency serves;

(d) the public health benefits created by the pilot project activities for residents within each pilot project agency's jurisdiction;

(e) how their efforts met the nationally recognized public health standards and guidelines described in subsection (1); and

(f) recommendations for improving the local public health system and creating a sustainable model for local public health agencies in Montana." Effective July 1, 2009.

Allocation of Funds: Section 2, Ch. 415, L. 2009, provided: "(1) If funds are made available for the program in [section 1], then the funds must be allocated as follows:

(a) grants of $25,000 a year in each year of the biennium to each of eight local public health agencies selected as provided in [section 1]; and

(b) $50,000 for the biennium to pay for the department's expenses in administering the grant program, providing technical assistance to the local public health agencies, and reimbursing the costs of travel for members of the public health system improvement task force as provided in 2-18-501 through 2-18-503.

(2) If less than $450,000 is available for the program provided for in [section 1], then the funding must be prorated on the basis of the allocations in subsection (1)." Effective July 1, 2009.

2007 Amendment: Chapter 150 inserted (1) concerning collaboration; inserted (1)(a) concerning inspections and written orders; deleted former (1) that read: "(1) shall study conditions affecting the citizens of the state by making use of birth, death, and sickness records"; in (1)(b) at beginning deleted "shall make investigations", near middle substituted "other conditions" for "improvement", and at end substituted "importance" for "to persons, groups, or the public"; in (1)(c) substituted "accept funds for and" for "shall"; inserted (1)(d) through (1)(o) concerning conditions of public health importance, efforts to develop and fund programs or initiatives that identify and ameliorate health problems, training for members of the public health workforce, actions necessary to abate, restrain, or prosecute the violation of public health laws and rules, advising state agencies on matters relating to public buildings and facilities, activities for the protection and improvement of oral health, rules setting standards for the operation of programs to protect the health of mothers and children, health education programs, consultation to school and local public health personnel, rules setting standards for a program to provide services to children with special health care needs, consultation to local boards of health, and agreements with tribal entities; deleted former (4) through (17) that read: "(4) shall inspect and work in conjunction with custodial institutions and Montana university system units periodically as necessary and at other times on request of the governor;

(5) after each inspection made under subsection (4), shall submit a written report on sanitary conditions to the governor and to the director of the department of corrections or the commissioner of higher education and include recommendations for improvement in conditions if necessary;

(6) shall advise state agencies on location, drainage, water supply, disposal of excreta, heating, plumbing, sewer systems, and ventilation of public buildings;

(7) shall develop and administer activities for the protection and improvement of dental health and supervise dentists employed by the state, local boards of health, or schools;

(8) shall develop, adopt, and administer rules setting standards for participation in and operation of programs to protect the health of mothers and children, which rules may include programs for nutrition, family planning services, improved pregnancy outcome, and those authorized by Title X of the federal Public Health Service Act and Title V of the federal Social Security Act;

(9) shall conduct health education programs;

(10) shall provide consultation to school and local community health nurses in the performance of their duties;

(11) shall consult with the superintendent of public instruction on health measures for schools;

(12) shall develop, adopt, and administer rules setting standards for a program to provide services to children with disabilities, including standards for:

(a) diagnosis;

(b) medical, surgical, and corrective treatment;

(c) aftercare and related services; and

(d) eligibility;

(13) shall provide consultation to local boards of health;

(14) shall bring actions in court for the enforcement of the health laws and defend actions brought against the board or department;

(15) shall accept and expend federal funds available for public health services;

(16) must have the power to use personnel of local departments of health to assist in the administration of laws relating to public health;

(17) shall adopt rules imposing fees for the tests and services performed by the department's laboratory. Fees should reflect the actual costs of the tests or services provided. The department may not establish fees exceeding the costs incurred in performing tests and services. All fees must be deposited in the state special revenue fund for the use of the department in performing tests and services"; in (1)(p) at beginning deleted "shall"; in (1)(p)(i) at end inserted "and other conditions of public health importance"; inserted (1)(p)(ii) concerning fees; inserted (1)(p)(v) concerning public health requirements for school sites; in (1)(q) at beginning deleted "shall enact or" and near middle after "alleviate" substituted "threats to the public health" for "injury"; inserted (2) concerning use of local personnel and other public health services and functions; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective October 1, 2007.

2005 Amendment: Chapter 386 deleted former (21) that read: "(21) shall adopt and enforce minimum sanitation requirements for tattooing as provided in 50-2-116, including regulation of premises, equipment, and methods of operation, solely oriented to the protection of public health and the prevention of communicable disease"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective January 1, 2006.

2003 Amendment: Chapter 391 in (18) after "regarding" deleted "the definition of communicable diseases and"; inserted (22) requiring the department to take measures to prevent and alleviate injury from the release of biological, chemical, or radiological agents capable of causing imminent infection, disability, or death; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective April 17, 2003.

1999 Amendment Void: The amendment to this section made by Ch. 508, L. 1999, was rendered void by sec. 12, Ch. 508, L. 1999, a contingent voidness section.

1997 Amendments: Chapter 73 in (17), in first sentence, substituted "department's laboratory" for "laboratory of the department of environmental quality" and in second sentence, after "Fees", deleted "established on an annual basis"; inserted (20) concerning licensing laboratories that conduct analysis of public water systems; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective July 1, 1997.

Chapter 472 in (12), in introductory clause, substituted "children with disabilities" for "handicapped children".

1995 Amendments: Chapter 324 inserted (20) requiring Department to adopt and enforce minimum sanitation requirements for tattooing, including regulation of premises, equipment, and methods of operation to protect public health and prevent communicable disease; and made minor changes in style.

Chapter 546 in (5) substituted "director of the department of corrections" for "director of corrections and human services"; deleted former (7) that read: "(7) organize laboratory services and provide equipment and personnel for those services"; in (17), at beginning of first phrase, deleted "after consultation with the board" and at end, after "department", inserted "of environmental sciences" (pursuant to sec. 568, Ch. 546, L. 1995, a coordination section, the Code Commissioner substituted "department of environmental quality" for "department of environmental sciences"); and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective July 1, 1995.

Saving Clause: Section 571, Ch. 546, L. 1995, was a saving clause.

1991 Amendment Instructions to Code Commissioner: The Code Commissioner changed "director of institutions" to "director of corrections and human services", pursuant to sec. 1, Ch. 262, L. 1991, directing the Code Commissioner to make the change wherever necessary in the Montana Code Annotated. Amendment effective July 1, 1991.

1989 Amendment: At beginning of (18) inserted "after consultation with the board" and at end of first clause, after "department", deleted "except fees relating to water analysis, which are imposed by the board pursuant to 75-6-103(2)(b)". Amendment effective March 21, 1989.

1983 Amendments: Chapter 230, in (9), substituted "develop, adopt, and administer rules setting standards for participation in and operation of programs to protect the health of mothers and children, which rules may include programs for nutrition, family planning services, improved pregnancy outcome, and those authorized by Title X of the federal Public Health Service Act and Title V of the federal Social Security Act" for former (9), which read: "develop and administer a program to protect the health of mothers and children;"; in (13), substituted "develop, adopt, and administer rules setting standards for a program to provide services to handicapped children, including standards for" for "develop and administer a program for services to handicapped children including diagnosis, medical, surgical, and corrective treatment, and after-care and related services;"; inserted (13)(d) relating to eligibility; in (18), at end of first sentence and in third sentence made the same changes as those made by Ch. 660, which are explained below.

Chapter 281, in (18), inserted "state" before "special revenue fund" at the end of the fourth sentence as that sentence reads after the Ch. 660 amendment.

Chapter 660, in (18), near end of first sentence after "department" inserted exception clause; inserted second sentence requiring fees to reflect actual costs of test or services; in third sentence made minor changes in phraseology; and at the end of the fourth sentence substituted "deposited in the special revenue fund for the use of the department in performing tests and services" for "deposited in the general fund". The changes in the first and third sentences are the same as those made by Ch. 230.

1983 Statement of Intent: Senate Bill 200 (Ch. 230, L. 1983) contained a statement of intent which read: "A statement of intent is required for Senate Bill 200 because it amends Section 50-1-202, MCA, to authorize the Department of Health and Environmental Sciences [now Department of Public Health and Human Services] to adopt rules implementing existing programs promoting maternal and child health and providing handicapped children's services.

The Department has since 1967 been mandated to develop and administer maternal and child health programs and handicapped children's services, programs which by their nature require standards to be set for such areas as appropriate medical treatment, eligibility for financial assistance and program participation, and reimbursement for services. Those programs presently include the Women, Infants, and Children (WIC) supplemental food program ensuring proper nutrition for young children and low-income pregnant and nursing women; the Child Care Food Program providing food assistance to children in day care; family planning; the Improved Pregnancy Outcome Project; and the Handicapped Children's Program. In addition, all of the present programs receive federal funding and are subject to federal program requirements which mandate standards be set for fair hearings, property management, etc. The Department has, therefore, had to set the required standards for those programs without having the authority under state law to adopt binding rules for them.

Consequently, it is the intent of the legislature that the Department be expressly authorized to adopt rules covering the following:

1. Eligibility criteria for program participation, e.g. income levels, nutritional status, and age;

2. Criteria which must be met by providers of care as a condition of reimbursement, including professional qualification;

3. Conditions included or excluded for coverage;

4. Policies included in state plans, such as the allocation of funds within a program, evaluation procedures and reporting procedures relating to fiscal and programmatic responsibilities;

5. Standards to ensure quality of care, such as care plans and objectives;

6. Fair hearing procedures;
7. Reimbursement rates;
8. Eligibility standards for food program providers;
9. Property management requirements."

Severability: Section 3, Ch. 230, L. 1983, was a severability clause.

1979 Statement of Intent: The statement of intent adopted with Ch. 219, L. 1979, provided: "A statement of intent is required for this bill because it amends section 50-1-202, MCA, to confirm the Department of Health and Environmental Sciences [now Department of Public Health and Human Services] rulemaking authority regarding communicable diseases and the transportation of dead human bodies.

HB 166 intends that the Department of Health and Environmental Sciences [now Department of Public Health and Human Services] have the authority to require by rule, in accordance with the Montana Administrative Procedure Act, the reporting to public health officials of communicable diseases by persons having knowledge of the occurrence of a case or suspected case, so that appropriate investigations and control measures may be specified and implemented to protect the public health. In addition, the Department shall also have the authority to amend and update existing rules, and to adopt new rules, in accordance with the Montana Administrative Procedure Act, as may be needed to ensure that reporting and methods of control of communicable diseases meet the standards of current, preferred medical and public health practice.

In this same spirit, the Department shall also adopt rules to protect the public against possible communicable hazards of dead human bodies.

By way of illustration, the following categories of rules are examples of topics that need to be addressed:

1. Definitions (For example, the terms carrier, quarantine, immunization, etc. need specific definitions.)
2. Designation of communicable diseases to be reported. (For example, measles, legionnaires disease, influenza, typhoid, etc.)
3. Form and procedure for reporting communicable diseases.
4. Confidentiality and access to records.
5. Types of quarantine and isolation.
6. Procedures for establishing and removing quarantine.
7. Conduct of transport, funeral, and burial of dead human bodies.
8. Specific control measures for specific diseases (for example, control measures for measles would be different from dysentery.)"

Case Notes

Inspection of Libby Vermiculite Mine — State's Duty to Miners — Statutory Construction — Release of Inspection Records — Application of Public Duty Doctrine — No Federal Preemption: Several miners who had worked in a vermiculite mine in Libby, Montana, brought suit against the state, claiming that in spite of numerous state inspections beginning in 1956, the state negligently failed to warn the miners that the vermiculite was a carcinogen. The miners claimed that as a result, they developed asbestosis and other diseases and, in some cases, died of their illnesses. The Supreme Court held that: (1) 50-70-105(7) (now repealed) and subsection (2) of this section imposed a duty upon the state to conduct investigations of health conditions and make the resulting written reports available to the public (see 2007 amendment). The Supreme Court traced the predecessors of the statutes and, applying the statutory construction rule of the "last antecedent" and citing State ex rel. Peck v. Anderson, 92 M 298, 13 P2d 231 (1932), and Butte-Silver Bow Local Gov't v. St., 235 M 398, 768 P2d 327 (1989), interpreted the statutes as providing that the State Board of Health and its successor agencies had a mandatory duty to make investigations of the health conditions at the mine and report the results to the miners, and the fact that these statutes did not specifically mention "mines" or "miners" made no difference. (2) a previous Montana Attorney General opinion, concluding that the reports of the inspections could not be released because a statute (section 69-201-208, R.C.M. 1947) prevented dissemination of private medical records, was a non sequitur and could not be relied upon as a basis for keeping the results of the workplace investigations by the Board of Health confidential; (3) because there is a "special relationship", as required in Nelson v. Driscoll, 1999 MT 193, 295 M 363, 983 P2d 972 (1999), between the State of Montana and the miners, the public duty doctrine, as discussed in Nelson, does not shield the state in its responsibility to conduct the inspections for the miners. The doctrine does not shield the state because the statutes requiring the inspections of the workplace and dissemination of the results of the inspections treat the miners as a special class of persons to whom the state owes a duty, the state undertook numerous inspections of the mine and those inspections qualify as "specific actions to protect a person", as required by Nelson, and according to affidavits filed by the miners, the miners relied on those inspections and the state to shield them from occupational diseases. (4) federal law, particularly the Federal Metal and Non-metallic Mine Safety Act (FMNMSA), did not preempt the Montana state statutes imposing a duty upon the state because there were no federal statutes governing occupational diseases before 1966 and after that date, the FMNMSA and amendments to it applied, which, by their very terms in 30 U.S.C. 738(a), expressly did not supersede state law. In its evaluation of the federal preemption issue, the Supreme Court cited Sleath v. West Mont Home Health Serv., Inc., 2000 MT 381, 304 M 1, 16 P3d 1042 (2000), and Favel v. Am. Renovation & Constr. Co., 2002 MT 266, 312 M 285, 59 P3d 412 (2002). Orr v. St., 2004 MT 354, 324 M 391, 106 P3d 100 (2004).

LOCAL BOARDS OF HEALTH

Part 1
General Provisions

Part Compiler's Comments

Preamble: The preamble attached to Ch. 415, L. 2009, provided: "WHEREAS, Montana law gives local public health agencies the authority and responsibility to undertake efforts to protect the public health and educate the public on health-related issues; and

WHEREAS, funding for local public health agencies varies widely across the state because of variations in local funding resources; and

WHEREAS, the National Association of County and City Health Officials, American Public Health Association, National Association of Local Boards of Health, and Association of State and Territorial Health Officials recognize that local public health agencies across the country are served by a system unique to each agency based on available financial, medical, and other resources; and

WHEREAS, these national public health organizations are developing a national accreditation program to guide the basic activities that local public health agencies should carry out regardless of the makeup of their local health systems."

Pilot Project for Implementing National Public Health Standards: Section 1, Ch. 415, L. 2009, provided: "(1) Subject to available funding, the department of public health and human services shall administer a pilot project to assist local public health agencies, as defined in 50-1-101, with preparing for national accreditation by using nationally recognized public health standards and guidelines that are based on the 10 essential public health services as outlined by the national association of county and city health officials, the centers for disease control and prevention, the public health accreditation board, and other national public health organizations. The public health standards and guidelines include but are not limited to the operational definition of a functional local health department and the national public health performance standards.

(2) The department shall:

(a) develop grant application and review criteria in accordance with this section;

(b) establish protocol, policy, goals, strategies, and timelines for the local public health agencies selected for the pilot project;

(c) establish evaluation criteria for the pilot project;

(d) provide materials and training to pilot project counties; and

(e) complete and submit a final report to the 2011 legislature as provided in 5-11-210.

(3) To the extent that it receives applications that meet grant review criteria established by the department in accordance with this section, the department shall award grants to eight local public health agencies, including a tribal health department. The grant awards must be made, in consultation with the public health system improvement task force established by the department, to:

(a) two local public health agencies in counties with populations of 40,000 or more residents;

(b) one local public health agency in a county with a population of between 20,000 and 40,000 residents;

(c) two local public health agencies in counties with populations of 5,000 to 20,000 residents; and

(d) three local public health agencies in counties with populations of fewer than 5,000 residents.

(4) A local public health agency selected for a grant shall demonstrate, through the application process, how it will use the funds to:

(a) prepare for national accreditation using the types of nationally recognized public health guidelines and standards described in subsection (1);

(b) effectively participate in a self-assessment of the local public health agency's capacity to deliver the 10 essential public health services as outlined in the nationally recognized public health guidelines and standards described in subsection (1);

(c) work with the department and the public health system improvement task force to ensure proper use of the grant, including participation in a process to evaluate the pilot project efforts; and

(d) complete measurement criteria established by the department and the public health system improvement task force.

(5) The department and the public health system improvement task force shall:

(a) serve as a resource for the local public health agencies selected for the pilot project as they prepare for national accreditation using nationally recognized public health standards and guidelines as described in subsection (1). In this capacity, the task force shall participate in:

(i) regularly scheduled conference calls; and

(ii) at least two meetings a year that are held in one of the counties in which the pilot project agencies are located;

(b) ensure that the technical assistance and training needs of the pilot project agencies are met; and

(c) assess the results of the pilot project.

(6) The public health system improvement task force and the pilot project agencies shall report the following information to the appropriate interim committees of the legislature by September 15, 2010:

(a) the estimated costs of becoming accredited agencies through the national accreditation program, based on their experiences in the pilot project, including information that explains how the costs were determined;

(b) their assessments of the ability of Montana's local public health agencies serving jurisdictions with varying population sizes in becoming accredited agencies through the national accreditation program, including funding and other resource management issues and challenges they encountered;

(c) suggestions for preparing local public health agencies for national accreditation that are relevant to the populations each pilot project agency serves;

(d) the public health benefits created by the pilot project activities for residents within each pilot project agency's jurisdiction;

(e) how their efforts met the nationally recognized public health standards and guidelines described in subsection (1); and

(f) recommendations for improving the local public health system and creating a sustainable model for local public health agencies in Montana." Effective July 1, 2009.

Allocation of Funds: Section 2, Ch. 415, L. 2009, provided: "(1) If funds are made available for the program in [section 1], then the funds must be allocated as follows:

(a) grants of $25,000 a year in each year of the biennium to each of eight local public health agencies selected as provided in [section 1]; and

(b) $50,000 for the biennium to pay for the department's expenses in administering the grant program, providing technical assistance to the local public health agencies, and reimbursing the costs of travel for members of the public health system improvement task force as provided in 2-18-501 through 2-18-503.

(2) If less than $450,000 is available for the program provided for in [section 1], then the funding must be prorated on the basis of the allocations in subsection (1)." Effective July 1, 2009.

Case Notes

Constitutionality of Former Sections — Rulemaking: Section 69-809, R.C.M. 1947 (now repealed), giving full-time County and District Boards of Health power to enact rules, was unconstitutional as invalid delegation of legislative power; section 69-813, R.C.M. 1947 (now repealed), setting forth a penalty for violation of act or rules thereunder, was unconstitutional insofar as it applied to rules promulgated under section 69-809, R.C.M. 1947 (now repealed). Bacus v. Lake County, 138 M 69, 354 P2d 1056 (1960).

Political Subdivisions: Under section 69-805, R.C.M. 1947 (now repealed), authorizing adjacent counties and first-class cities located therein to form a district health unit, the counties themselves were still the political subdivisions of the state that entered into cooperative measure. Bacus v. Lake County, 138 M 69, 354 P2d 1056 (1960).

Abatement of Nuisances: County health officer had no power to take steps for abatement of nuisances or removal of sources of filth and to incur expense in connection therewith without prior authorization from County Health Board. Pue v. County of Lewis and Clark, 75 M 207, 243 P 573 (1926).

Attorney General's Opinions

Local Health Boards Required to Inspect Food Establishments and Participate in Enforcement: In light of clear statutory provisions that place a mandatory duty upon a local health board and its officer to participate in inspection and enforcement of health laws regarding food establishments, the discretionary language of 50-50-305 simply allows an inspection program to be more accountable by permitting the Department to restrict funds going to the local board if it is not a functioning board or if it is not conducting inspections or enforcing legal provisions in a satisfactory manner. The language does not imply that the inspection and enforcement duties are discretionary. Therefore, local boards of health are required to inspect food establishments and to participate in enforcing state laws that govern those establishments. 46 A.G. Op. 3 (1995).

District Boards of Health — Formation and Insurance — County Attorney Not Legal Advisor: A District Board of Health formed pursuant to 50-2-107 stands in place of the County Board of Health in those counties that formed the District Board of Health. Once a county joins a District Board of Health, there is no need for the county to maintain a County Board of Health. The District Board of Health has the responsibility of providing its own legal advisor because there is no specific statutory mandate that the County Attorney act as legal advisor to the District Board of Health. The counties creating a District Board of Health are responsible for providing liability insurance for their District Board of Health. 41 A.G. Op. 22 (1985).

50-2-105. City boards of health.

Attorney General's Opinions

Interlocal Cooperation Agreements: Since cities may provide for a Board of Health and each county has a Board of Health and notwithstanding the fact that cities other than first- and second-class cities cannot participate in district boards, all cities and counties may enter into contracts for the provision of common services. 35 A.G. Op. 48 (1973).

Only First- and Second-Class Cities Required to Have Boards of Health: This section requires only first- and second-class cities to establish city Boards of Health. Other classes of cities are not required to establish Boards. They are authorized to do so by 7-31-4101. 35 A.G. Op. 48 (1973).

50-2-106. City-county boards of health.

Compiler's Comments

1999 Amendment: Chapter 47 in (1) after "governing body of the city" inserted "or cities" and after "county and a" deleted "first- or second-class"; in (4) near middle after "governing body of the city" inserted "or cities"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective October 1, 1999.

Case Notes

Local Board of Health Not Considered Governing Body Despite Interlocal Agreement: Despite the fact that a county board of health was created by interlocal agreement, the District Court erred in concluding that a local board of health is considered a governing body by definition under 76-3-103. The Montana Subdivision and Platting Act does not, under 76-3-501 and 76-3-504, authorize local boards of health to adopt and enforce regulations governing sanitation in subdivisions, regardless of size. The authority of a local board of health to regulate subdivisions derives from 50-2-116, not from the Montana Subdivision and Platting Act. Skinner Enterprises, Inc. v. Lewis & Clark County Bd. of Health, 286 M 256, 950 P2d 733, 54 St. Rep. 1398 (1997).

Review, Not Regulatory, Function Applicable to Local Board of Health Control of Minor Subdivision: This section, when read in conjunction with 76-4-104, does not authorize a local board of health to regulate sanitation in minor subdivisions containing five or fewer parcels. By its plain language, 76-4-104 delegates to local boards of health the power to review select subdivisions but not the power to promulgate regulations. As a reviewing authority, the board's function is limited to reviewing the proposed water supply, sewage, and solid waste disposal facilities and advising the Department of Environmental Quality of its recommendation for approval or disapproval of the subdivision. However, 50-2-116 explicitly authorizes a local board of health to regulate sewage control and disposal that is not regulated by the Montana Subdivision and Platting Act. The Act limits state sanitation regulation to subdivisions containing parcels of fewer than 20 acres each and precludes regulation of subdivisions in which each parcel of land contains more than 20 acres. Thus, the regulation of sanitation in subdivisions containing parcels of more than 20 acres each is clearly the responsibility of local boards of health. Nevertheless, 76-4-122 requires both state and local approval before filing a subdivision plat with the County Clerk and Recorder, and to hold that approval by the local board of health is a ministerial, nondiscretionary act would render 76-4-122 inoperative. Giving effect to the purpose of all the applicable statutes and examining the legislative history of 50-2-116, the Supreme Court held that the 1991 enactment of 50-2-116(1)(i) revealed a legislative intent to expand, rather than diminish, the authority of local boards of health to regulate subdivision sanitation. Thus, local boards of health have discretionary statutory authority to regulate all subdivisions, regardless of size, notwithstanding the state's authority to regulate certain subdivisions under the Montana Subdivision and Platting Act. Attorney General's Opinions

District Boards of Health — Formation and Insurance — County Attorney Not Legal Advisor: A District Board of Health formed pursuant to this section stands in place of the County Board of Health in those counties that formed the District Board of Health. Once a county joins a District Board of Health, there is no need for the county to maintain a County Board of Health. The District Board of Health has the responsibility of providing its own legal advisor because there is no specific statutory mandate that the County Attorney act as legal advisor to the District Board of Health. The counties creating a District Board of Health are responsible for providing liability insurance for their District Board of Health. 41 A.G. Op. 22 (1985).

ARM 37.114.102 Local board rules.

Case Notes

Local Board of Health Not Considered Governing Body Despite Interlocal Agreement: Despite the fact that a county board of health was created by interlocal agreement, the District Court erred in concluding that a local board of health is considered a governing body by definition under 76-3-103. The Montana Subdivision and Platting Act does not, under 76-3-501 and 76-3-504, authorize local boards of health to adopt and enforce regulations governing sanitation in subdivisions, regardless of size. The authority of a local board of health to regulate subdivisions derives from this section, not from the Montana Subdivision and Platting Act. Skinner Enterprises, Inc. v. Lewis & Clark County Bd. of Health, 286 M 256, 950 P2d 733, 54 St. Rep. 1398 (1997).

No Mandatory Application of Wastewater Treatment Regulation by Local Board of Health: Under 76-3-501, review and approval or disapproval of a subdivision under the Montana Subdivision and Platting Act may occur only under regulations in effect at the time that an application is submitted to the governing body. The Lewis and Clark County Commission approved the Green Acres subdivision in July 1990, at which time the Lewis and Clark County Board of Health's onsite wastewater treatment regulations mandated shallow standard treatment systems, rather than the present regulation requiring intermittent sand filters. Skinner Enterprises, Inc., argued that the 1990 regulation should be applied pursuant to 76-3-501. However, local boards of health derive authority to regulate subdivisions from this section, not from the Montana Subdivision and Platting Act. Therefore, the local board's own onsite wastewater treatment regulations did not obligate the local board to apply the 1990 regulation. Further, 50-2-130 allows local boards of health to promulgate regulations that are more stringent than comparable state regulations, notwithstanding the provisions of 7-1-113 prohibiting a local government from exercising any power inconsistent with state law or administrative regulations. The facts regarding whether shallow-capped drainfields or intermittent sand filters are considered more stringent were not the subject of the present appeal. The discretionary authority of the local board of health to regulate subdivision sanitation by requiring intermittent sand filters was affirmed. Skinner Enterprises, Inc. v. Lewis & Clark County Bd. of Health, 286 M 256, 950 P2d 733, 54 St. Rep. 1398 (1997).

Review, Not Regulatory, Function Applicable to Local Board of Health Control of Minor Subdivision: Section 50-2-106, when read in conjunction with 76-4-104, does not authorize a local board of health to regulate sanitation in minor subdivisions containing five or fewer parcels. By its plain language, 76-4-104 delegates to local boards of health the power to review select subdivisions but not the power to promulgate regulations. As a reviewing authority, the board's function is limited to reviewing the proposed water supply, sewage, and solid waste disposal facilities and advising the Department of Environmental Quality of its recommendation for approval or disapproval of the subdivision. However, this section explicitly authorizes a local board of health to regulate sewage control and disposal that is not regulated by the Montana Subdivision and Platting Act. The Act limits state sanitation regulation to subdivisions containing parcels of fewer than 20 acres each and precludes regulation of subdivisions in which each parcel of land contains more than 20 acres. Thus, the regulation of sanitation in subdivisions containing parcels of more than 20 acres each is clearly the responsibility of local boards of health. Nevertheless, 76-4-122 requires both state and local approval before filing a subdivision plat with the County Clerk and Recorder, and to hold that approval by the local board of health is a ministerial, nondiscretionary act would render 76-4-122 inoperative. Giving effect to the purpose of all the applicable statutes and examining the legislative history of this section, the Supreme Court held that the 1991 enactment of subsection (1)(i) of this section revealed a legislative intent to expand, rather than diminish, the authority of local boards of health to regulate subdivision sanitation. Thus, local boards of health have discretionary statutory authority to regulate all subdivisions, regardless of size, notwithstanding the state's authority to regulate certain subdivisions under the Montana Subdivision and Platting Act. Skinner Enterprises, Inc. v. Lewis & Clark County Bd. of Health, 286 M 256, 950 P2d 733, 54 St. Rep. 1398 (1997).

Constitutionality of Former Sections — Rulemaking: Section 69-809, R.C.M. 1947 (now repealed), giving full-time County and District Boards of Health power to enact rules, was unconstitutional as invalid delegation of legislative power; section 69-813, R.C.M. 1947 (now repealed), setting forth a penalty for violation of act or rules thereunder, was unconstitutional insofar as it applied to rules promulgated under section 69-809, R.C.M. 1947 (now repealed). Bacus v. Lake County, 138 M 69, 354 P2d 1056 (1960).

Deputy Health Officer: Section 69-604, R.C.M. 1947 (now repealed), making provision for a local health officer, did not provide for a deputy health officer. Pue v. County of Lewis and Clark, 75 M 207, 243 P 573 (1926).

Setting of Compensation for Health Board Employees — Approval Required: A city-county health board may not set the level of compensation of board employees without the approval of the Board of County Commissioners and of the governing body of the city. 47 A.G. Op. 11 (1998). See also 38 A.G. Op. 35 (1979).

Local Health Boards Required to Inspect Food Establishments and Participate in Enforcement: In light of clear statutory provisions that place a mandatory duty upon a local health board and its officer to participate in inspection and enforcement of health laws regarding food establishments, the discretionary language of 50-50-305 simply allows an inspection program to be more accountable by permitting the Department to restrict funds going to the local board if it is not a functioning board or if it is not conducting inspections or enforcing legal provisions in a satisfactory manner. The language does not imply that the inspection and enforcement duties are discretionary. Therefore, local boards of health are required to inspect food establishments and to participate in enforcing state laws that govern those establishments. 46 A.G. Op. 3 (1995).

Regulation of Firearms as Health Ordinance Not Permitted: A city ordinance regulating the discharge of firearms outside the city limits may not be enacted as a health ordinance under this section and enforced pursuant to the extraterritorial powers granted to the mayor by 7-4-4306. 42 A.G. Op. 8 (1987).

District Boards of Health — Licensing Authority: District Boards of Health have statutory authority to license contractors who perform work on sewage disposal systems that are not connected to a municipal sewage system. (See 1991 amendment.) 37 A.G. Op. 177 (1978).

WHEREAS, Montana must simultaneously move toward reducing redundant and unnecessary regulation that dulls the state's competitive advantage while being ever vigilant in the protection of the public's health, safety, and welfare; and

WHEREAS, Montana's administrative agencies should consider applicable federal standards when adopting, readopting, or amending rules with analogous federal counterparts; and

WHEREAS, Montana's administrative agencies should analyze whether analogous federal standards sufficiently protect the health, safety, and welfare of Montana's citizens; and

WHEREAS, as part of the formal rulemaking process, the public should be advised of the agencies' conclusions about whether analogous federal standards sufficiently protect the health, safety, and welfare of Montana citizens."

The legislature intends that in addition to all requirements imposed by existing law and rules, the board or the department include as part of the initial publication and all subsequent publications of a rule a written finding if the rule in question contains any standards or requirements that exceed the standards or requirements imposed by comparable federal law.

If the rules are more stringent than comparable federal law, the written finding must include but is not limited to a discussion of the policy reasons and an analysis that supports the board's or department's decision that the proposed state standards or requirements protect public health or the environment of the state and that the state standards or requirements to be imposed can mitigate harm to the public health or the environment and are achievable under current technology. The department is not required to show that the federal regulation is inadequate to protect public health. The written finding must also include information from the hearing record regarding the costs to the regulated community directly attributable to the proposed state standard or requirement."

(3) [This act] does not apply to the establishment of fees or public participation requirements."

Case Notes

No Mandatory Application of Wastewater Treatment Regulation by Local Board of Health: Under 76-3-501, review and approval or disapproval of a subdivision under the Montana

Subdivision and Platting Act may occur only under regulations in effect at the time that an application is submitted to the governing body. The Lewis and Clark County Commission approved the Green Acres subdivision in July 1990, at which time the Lewis and Clark County Board of Health's onsite wastewater treatment regulations mandated shallow standard treatment systems, rather than the present regulation requiring intermittent sand filters. Skinner Enterprises, Inc., argued that the 1990 regulation should be applied pursuant to 76-3-501. However, local boards of health derive authority to regulate subdivisions from 50-2-116, not from the Montana Subdivision and Platting Act. Therefore, the local board's own onsite wastewater treatment regulations did not obligate the local board to apply the 1990 regulation. Further, this section allows local boards of health to promulgate regulations that are more stringent than comparable state regulations, notwithstanding the provisions of 7-1-113 prohibiting a local government from exercising any power inconsistent with state law or administrative regulations. The facts regarding whether shallow-capped drainfields or intermittent sand filters are considered more stringent were not the subject of the present appeal. The discretionary authority of the local board of health to regulate subdivision sanitation by requiring intermittent sand filters was affirmed. Skinner Enterprises, Inc. v. Lewis & Clark County Bd. of Health, 286 M 256, 950 P2d 733, 54 St. Rep. 1398 (1997). In early 1998, prior to trial, the Board again amended the onsite wastewater treatment regulations, superseding the 1995 regulations to which Skinner objected. As a result, the legality of the 1995 amendments were no longer of any practical consequence to the parties and Skinner's objections to the process by which the 1995 amendments were adopted were moot and properly dismissed. Skinner Enterprises, Inc. v. Lewis & Clark City-County Health Dept., 1999 MT 106, 294 M 310, 980 P2d 1049, 56 St. Rep. 438 (1999).

General Provisions

50-3-101. Definitions.

Compiler's Comments

2007 Amendment: Chapter 449 in two places after "investigation" substituted "section" for "program". Amendment effective June 1, 2007.

1991 Amendment: Substituted definitions of Department and fire prevention and investigation program for former definition that read: "In this chapter "fire marshal" or "state fire marshal" means the state fire marshal provided for in 2-15-2005". Amendment effective April 29, 1991.

Code Commissioner Correction: The definition of "bureau" as meaning the fire marshal bureau created by 2-15-2005 was deleted because sections 3 and 4 of Ch. 503, L. 1985, deleted language creating the bureau.

50-3-102. Powers and duties of department regarding state fire prevention and investigation — rules.

Compiler's Comments

2007 Amendment: Chapter 449 in (1)(c) near beginning after "local" substituted "governmental fire agencies organized under Title 7, chapter 33, in fire" for "fire and law enforcement authorities in arson"; in (2) at end after "state" inserted "if the rules do not conflict with building regulations adopted by the department of labor and industry"; and in (4) near middle after "portion" substituted "an existing" for "a". Amendment effective June 1, 2007.

2003 Amendment: Chapter 387 in (1)(a) near beginning of first sentence after "as often as" deleted "its budget and other inspection"; deleted former (1)(h) that read: "(h) keep a record of all fires occurring in the state, the origin of the fires, and all facts, statistics, and circumstances relating to the fires that have been determined by investigations under the provisions of chapter 63. Except for statements of witnesses given during an investigation, information that may be held in confidence under 50-63-403, and criminal justice information subject to restrictions on dissemination in accordance with Title 44, chapter 5, the record must be open at all times to public inspection"; inserted (5) concerning records that must be open at all times to public inspection; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective October 1, 2003.

1995 Amendment: Chapter 546 in (1)(a), in three places, substituted references to Department of Corrections for references to Department of Corrections and Human Services and immediately after inserted references to Department of Public Health and Human Services; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective July 1, 1995.

1991 Amendments — Instructions to Code Commissioner: The Code Commissioner changed "department of institutions" to "department of corrections and human services", pursuant to sec. 1, Ch. 262, L. 1991, directing the Code Commissioner to make the change wherever necessary in the Montana Code Annotated. Amendment effective July 1, 1991.

Chapter 706 in (1) through (4), near beginning, substituted "department" for "state fire marshal"; substituted (1)(a) requiring inspection of state buildings for former (1)(a) and (1)(b) that read: "(a) make at least one inspection a year of each state institution and submit a copy of the report to the department of institutions with recommendations in regard to fire prevention, fire protection, and public safety;

(b) make at least one inspection a year of each unit of the Montana university system and submit a copy of the report to the commissioner of higher education with recommendations in regard to fire prevention, fire protection, and public safety"; in (1)(b), after "buildings", inserted "as provided in chapter 61"; in (1)(c), before "supervise", inserted "may initiate or" and before "supervision" inserted "the initiation or"; deleted former (1)(e) that read: "(e) review all training programs on investigation of accidental and incendiary fires"; deleted former (1)(g) that read: "(g) encourage and assist local fire authorities in fire prevention programs and adopt standards and implement a program to encourage fire departments to meet such standards"; in (1)(e), after "level", deleted "and to represent the state in structural fire matters"; in (1)(f) substituted "fire prevention matters" for "structural fire matters"; in (1)(h), after "50-63-403", inserted "and criminal justice information subject to restrictions on dissemination in accordance with Title 44, chapter 5"; deleted (1)(l) that read: "(l) make an annual report to the attorney general containing a detailed statement of his official action and the transactions of his department, and the attorney general shall, in turn, submit the report to the governor with such recommendations and comments thereon as he considers necessary"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective April 29, 1991.

1985 Amendment: In (2) after "hazards of fire" deleted "and explosion"; inserted (3) requiring adoption of rules concerning explosives; and made minor changes in arrangement and phraseology.

Statement of Intent: The statement of intent attached to Ch. 187, L. 1985, provided: "A statement of intent is required for this bill because section 2 [amending 50-3-102] requires the state fire marshal [now department of justice] to adopt rules based on nationally recognized standards necessary for safeguarding life and property from the hazards associated with explosives.

It is the intent of the legislature that the fire marshal [now department of justice] adopt rules based on article 77 of the Uniform Fire Code, international conference of building officials. However, any changes in the Uniform Fire Code must be included in the fire marshal's [now department of justice's] rules, by amendment, if the fire marshal [now department of justice] considers the changes appropriate."

CASES DECIDED UNDER FORMER EXPLOSIVES LAW
TITLE 50, CH. 38

Injured Employee's Remedies: Despite blasting company's violation of former chapter 38, it could not be held liable under common-law action for negligence without an allegation of intentional injury by the defendant by deliberate infliction of harm where otherwise the remedy is within the workers' compensation law. Enberg v. Anaconda Co., 158 M 135, 489 P2d 1036 (1971).

Crude Oil and Its Products Not Within Prohibition: The term "explosives" has no application to gasoline or other products of crude oil, despite the contention that former chapter 38 prohibited the erection of an oil refinery within a residential district. Purcell v. Davis, 100 M 480, 50 P2d 255 (1935).

Negligence Per Se:

An allegation of negligence in storing dynamite in a mine, in a quantity greater than 3,000 pounds, or in storing that or any other explosive in a mine where, should an explosion accidentally take place, escape by those working in the mine would be cut off, charges the violation of a specific duty imposed by former chapter 38, and such a violation is negligence per se. Westlake v. Keating Gold Min. Co., 48 M 120, 136 P 38 (1913).

Plaintiff who, at time of explosion of dynamite stored in a mine contrary to former chapter 38, was not so situated as to have his escape from the mine cut off by it could not charge as an act of negligence the storage of the powder in a place where, in case of accidental discharge, escape by those working in the mine would be cut off, since the causal connection between his injuries and the stoppage of egress from the mine would be lacking. Westlake v. Keating Gold Min. Co., 48 M 120, 136 P 38 (1913).

Attorney General's Opinions

"Explosives" Not to Include Small Arms Ammunition or Fireworks: The term "explosives" in 45-5-623 does not include small arms ammunition or fireworks permitted to be sold to the public under 50-37-104. 42 A.G. Op. 83 (1988).

Fire Code — Key Lock Gas Stations: Under the uniform fire code adopted pursuant to this section and 50-3-103, service stations may operate unattended key lock systems for commercial, industrial, governmental, and manufacturing establishments during the hours they are not open to the public. 39 A.G. Op. 16 (1981).

Method of Enforcement as to Public Buildings: If public buildings do not comply with the fire safety rules promulgated by the Fire Marshal Bureau (now Department of Justice), those rules may be enforced by judicial action enjoining the use of buildings or portions of buildings until there is compliance. (Annotator's note: Chapter 503, L. 1985, changed the term "fire marshal bureau" to "department of justice".) 35 A.G. Op. 45 (1973).

Authorization to Seek Closure of Buildings Not in Compliance: If a state institution, unit of the state University System, or state-owned building is maintained in violation of 50-3-102 or its implementing rules, the State Fire Marshal Bureau (now Department of Justice) may obtain a court order enjoining use of the building until the violation is corrected. 33 A.G. Op. 45 (1973).

Compiler's Comments

2003 Amendments — Composite Section: Chapter 387 deleted former (1)(f) through (1)(j) that read: "(f) flue and chimney construction;

(g) heating devices;

(h) electrical wiring and equipment;

(i) air conditioning, ventilating, and other duct systems;

(j) refrigeration systems"; deleted former (1)(l) that read: "(l) oil and gas wells"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective October 1, 2003.

Chapter 443 in (2) near middle after "by the state" substituted "building code or a county, city, or town building code" for "or a municipal building code". Amendment effective October 1, 2003.

2001 Amendment: Chapter 483 in (2) near end after "department of" substituted "labor and industry" for "commerce"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective July 1, 2001.

1997 Amendments: Chapter 116 inserted (5) concerning installation of aboveground tank in community with population of 1,500 or less; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective March 20, 1997.

Chapter 201 inserted (6) regarding restrictions on rules for storage tanks containing class I or class II liquids; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective April 4, 1997.

1991 Amendment: In (1), near beginning of first sentence, substituted "department" for "state fire marshal" and near middle of second sentence inserted "fire extinguishers" and near end, after "chemicals", inserted "or materials"; in (3), at beginning, substituted "Federal or other nationally recognized standards for fire protection" for "Standards of the national fire protection association, United States bureau of standards, and American insurance association"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective April 29, 1991.

1989 Amendment: Near end of (1), after "protection", inserted "storage of smokeless powder and small arms primers". See contingent effective date compiler's comment.

Contingent Effective Date: Section 9, Ch. 506, L. 1989, was a contingency section that provided: "(1) [This act] is void if:

(a) the western fire chiefs association adopts at its annual meeting in August 1989 the proposed changes to article 77 of the uniform fire code that are specifically referred to as amendments to division II "storage", regarding smokeless powder and small arms primers for retail sales;

(b) the proposed changes are no more restrictive than the terms of [this act]; and

(c) the state fire marshal [now department of justice] adopts the amended provisions for storage of smokeless powder and small arms primers for retail sales by March 31, 1990.

(2) [This act] is effective April 1, 1990." The contingency did not occur, so the 1989 amendment became effective April 1, 1990.

1985 Amendment: In (2) changed "department of administration" to "department of commerce".

Composite Section: This section was amended twice in 1977, once by Ch. 187 and once by Ch. 519. The Code Commissioner has made a composite section embodying some but not all of the changes made by both amendments.

Administrative Rules

Title 23, chapter 12, subchapter 4, ARM Fire safety.

Attorney General's Opinions

Designation of Fire Service Organization as First Responder to Hazardous Materials Incident: The designation of a fire service organization as first responder to a hazardous materials incident is a matter to be included in the state and local disaster and emergency plans. 42 A.G. Op. 104 (1988).

Response by Fire Service Organizations to Hazardous Materials Incidents: Unless otherwise provided by law, the decision to order a firefighter to respond to or investigate a hazardous materials incident is within the discretion of the supervising entity of each fire service organization. The State Fire Marshal (now Department of Justice) does not have specific rulemaking authority to prescribe which fire service organization should respond to such incidents. 42 A.G. Op. 104 (1988).

Fire Code — Key Lock Gas Stations: Under the uniform fire code adopted pursuant to this section and 50-3-102, service stations may operate unattended key lock systems for commercial, industrial, governmental, and manufacturing establishments during the hours they are not open to the public. 39 A.G. Op. 16 (1981).

Method of Enforcement as to Public Buildings: If public buildings do not comply with the fire safety rules promulgated by the Fire Marshal Bureau (now Department of Justice), those rules may be enforced by judicial action enjoining the use of buildings or portions of buildings until there is compliance. (Annotator's note: Chapter 503, L. 1985, changed the term "fire marshal bureau" to "department of justice".) 35 A.G. Op. 45 (1973).

Authorization to Seek Closure of Buildings Not in Compliance: If a state institution, unit of the state University System, or state-owned building is maintained in violation of 50-3-102 or its implementing rules, the State Fire Marshal Bureau (now Department of Justice) may obtain a court order enjoining use of the building until the violation is corrected. 33 A.G. Op. 45 (1973).

50-3-106. Appointment of special fire inspectors.

Compiler's Comments

2007 Amendment: Chapter 449 near middle after "any" substituted "inspection" for "function" and at end after "investigation" substituted "section" for "program"; deleted former (2) that read: "(2) When performing these duties or attending a training course approved by the department, special fire inspectors may be paid at a rate not to exceed $56 a day plus travel expenses as provided for in 2-18-501 through 2-18-503, as amended"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective June 1, 2007.

1991 Amendment: Substituted present (1) regarding appointment and duties of special fire inspectors for former language that read: "(1) The state fire marshal may appoint special deputy state fire marshals throughout the state and define their duties"; in (2), after "course", substituted "approved by the department" for "conducted by the state fire marshal" and after "special" substituted "fire inspectors" for "deputy fire marshals". Amendment effective April 29, 1991.

50-3-109. Tax on fire insurance premiums.

Compiler's Comments

2003 Amendment: Chapter 380 at end of (1) substituted "33-2-708" for "17-2-121". Amendment effective October 1, 2003.

1999 Amendment: Chapter 51 in (1) at end substituted language providing for deposit of 2 ½% of tax in the general fund for former language that read: "The taxes are:

(a) 1% to be deposited as provided in 17-2-121; and

(b) 1 ½% to be used for purposes of supplemental pensions"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective March 15, 1999.

1997 Amendment: Chapter 532 in (1), near beginning after "enumerated in", substituted "subsection (2)" for "19-18-512", near middle, after "auditor", deleted "and commissioner of insurance ex officio", and after "paid by it" substituted "taxes" for "a tax of 1%"; inserted (1)(a) and (1)(b) setting the tax rates; inserted (2) clarifying risks; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective July 1, 1997.

Code Commissioner Correction: In (1)(b), at end, the Code Commissioner substituted "supplemental pensions" for "19-13-1006" because all code sections referring to supplemental pensions were repealed.

CHAPTER 4
HEALTH CARE POLICY

Chapter Compiler's Comments

1993 Statement of Intent: The statement of intent attached to Ch. 606, L. 1993, provided: "(1) A statement of legislative intent is required for this bill because:

(a) [section 4] [50-4-202] [now repealed] authorizes the Montana health care authority to adopt rules necessary to implement [sections 1 through 20] [Title 50, ch. 4, parts 1 through 5]. In addition to those rulemaking matters addressed below, the authority may adopt rules governing such matters as its meetings, public hearings, and rules of procedure and rules of ethical conduct governing its members.

(b) [section 17] [50-4-401] [now repealed] requires the Montana health care authority to adopt rules to establish regional health care planning boards within the health care planning regions established in [section 17] [50-4-401] [now repealed] and to establish a procedure for selection of regional board members. The rules establishing the boards must specify the number of members, any relevant qualifications, and the operations and duties of the boards and must provide for a funding mechanism by grant from the authority. In addition, the rules must provide for consideration of a balance between rural and urban interests in the selection of regional board members. The procedure for selection of the board members must provide for public notice of the selection process.

(c) [section 10] [50-4-501] [now repealed] grants the commissioner of insurance the authority to adopt rules specifying uniform health insurance claim forms and procedures. The forms should be based upon existing formats, be as short as possible, and be compatible with electronic data transmission.

(d) [section 19] [50-4-502] [now repealed] requires the authority to adopt rules relating to the unified health care data base. The authority's rules must specify in comprehensive detail what information is required to be provided by health care providers and the times at which the information is to be provided. The rules must also provide for audit procedures to determine the accuracy of the filed data. The confidentiality provisions must be consistent with other state laws governing the confidentiality of public records, including medical records, and must apply to employees of the authority and to others receiving or using records in the data base.

(e) [sections 23, 26, 27, 30, 31, and 34 through 36] [33-22-1802, 33-22-1808, 33-22-1809, 33-22-1812 [now repealed], 33-22-1813, 33-22-1814, 33-22-1818 [now repealed], 33-22-1819 [now repealed], and 33-22-1822] require the commissioner of insurance to adopt rules governing small employer group health plans. In determining the basic benefits package, the commissioner shall make objective determinations, supported by available data, concerning the type of benefits required and shall determine that the benefits to be required are cost-effective pursuant to the Small Employer Health Insurance Availability Act. The commissioner may adopt rules providing for a transition period to allow small employer carriers to comply with certain provisions of the act. The commissioner may approve the establishment of additional classes of businesses only if the commissioner determines that the additional classes would enhance the efficiency and fairness of the small employer health insurance market. The commissioner is required under the act to adopt rules to implement and administer the act.

(f) [section 44] [50-4-612] requires the authority to adopt rules implementing [sections 37 through 44] [Title 50, ch. 4, part 6]. The rules adopted by the authority must specify the form and content of applications for certificates of public advantage; details of the reconsideration, revocation, hearing, and appeal processes; and other matters as the authority determines necessary. The rules that are adopted by the authority must also provide the authority with direct supervision and control over the implementation of cooperative agreements between facilities.

(2) In preparing the plan required by [section 5] [50-4-301] [now repealed], the authority shall consider the following matters for the following features of the plan:

(a) a unified health care budget. The authority shall consider the development of a state health care budget based upon the budgets submitted by the regional health care planning boards.

(b) caps for provider expenditures. The authority shall consider a process for adopting mandatory limits on provider expenses, including fees and salaries.

(c) global budgeting for all health care spending. The authority shall consider adopting a budgeting process, with public involvement, by which a unified health care budget is determined.

(d) controlled capital expenditures. The authority shall consider adopting a system to control capital expenditures.

(e) binding cap on overall expenditures. The authority shall consider adopting mandatory limits on all types of expenditures of health care providers, including capital expenditures, small equipment purchases, personnel costs, and all other types of operating costs."

Severability: Section 46, Ch. 606, L. 1993, was a severability clause.

Effective Date: Section 47(1), Ch. 606, L. 1993, provided: "[Sections 1 through 20 . . .] [50-4-101, 50-4-102, 50-4-201, 50-4-202, 50-4-301 through 50-4-311, 50-4-401, 50-4-402, and 50-4-501 through 50-4-503] [all now repealed] are effective on passage and approval." Approved May 3, 1993.

Saving Clause: Section 21, Ch. 93, L. 1997, was a saving clause.

Preamble: The preamble attached to Ch. 171, L. 1997, provided: "WHEREAS, the 54th Montana Legislature enacted a bill to combine several state agencies into a new department of public health and human services; and

WHEREAS, it would better serve the needs of Montana to combine the functions and duties and limit the number of advisory councils associated with the department of public health and human services."

1995 Amendments — Phrase Change — Composite Section: Section 21, Ch. 255, L. 1995, directed the Code Commissioner to change references in the MCA to a person who is developmentally disabled or to a developmentally disabled person to a person with developmental disabilities. The change was not to be made to the phrase "seriously developmentally disabled". In (a) and (d) of the definition of long-term care facility, the Code Commissioner has made the change.

Chapter 366 in definition of adult day-care center, near middle, substituted "a regularly scheduled" for "an intermittent" and at end inserted "but that does not provide overnight care"; inserted definitions of adult foster care home, aged person, custodial care, disabled adult, and light personal care; in definition of ambulatory surgical facility, in first sentence after "a facility", deleted "not part of a hospital"; inserted definition of end-stage renal dialysis facility; in definition of health care facility, in third sentence after "includes", deleted "but is not limited to", after "surgical facilities" inserted "chemical dependency facilities, end-stage renal dialysis facilities", after "home health agencies" inserted "home infusion therapy agencies", after "infirmaries" deleted "kidney treatment centers", after "rehabilitation facilities" inserted "residential care facilities, and", and at end deleted "and adult day-care centers"; inserted definitions of home infusion therapy agency and home infusion therapy services; deleted definition of kidney treatment center that read: ""Kidney treatment center" means a facility that specializes in treatment of kidney diseases, including freestanding hemodialysis units"; in definition of long-term care facility, in first sentence after "skilled nursing care", inserted "residential care" and in second sentence, near beginning after "include", deleted "adult foster care licensed under 52-3-303"; inserted definition of personal care facility; in definition of resident, at end, substituted "or in a residential care facility" for "for intermediate or personal care"; inserted definitions of residential care facility and retirement home; and made minor changes in style.

Chapter 398 in definition of affected person, after "need", deleted "a member of the public who will be served by the proposal" and at end deleted "an agency that plans or assists in planning for health care facilities"; in definition of ambulatory surgical facility, after "means a facility", deleted "not part of a hospital"; deleted definition of batch, which was those letters of intent to seek approval for new beds or major medical equipment that were accumulated during a single batching period; deleted definition of batching period, which was a period, not exceeding a month, established by Department rule, during which letters of intent to seek approval for new beds or major medical equipment were accumulated pending further processing of all letters of intent within the batch; deleted definition of challenge period, which was a period, not exceeding a month, established by Department rule, during which a person could apply for comparative review with an applicant whose letter of intent was received during the preceding batching period; and in definition of observation bed, after "means a bed occupied", deleted "for not more than 6 hours". Amendment effective April 12, 1995.

Chapter 418 in definition of Board substituted "board of public health" for "board of health and environmental sciences"; in definition of Department substituted "department of public health" for "department of health and environmental sciences"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective July 1, 1995.

Chapter 546 deleted definition of Board that read: ""Board" means the board of health and environmental sciences, provided for in 2-15-2104"; in definition of Department substituted "department of public health and human services provided for in 2-15-2201" for "department of health and environmental sciences provided for in Title 2, chapter 15, part 21"; in definition of long-term care facility, at end, substituted "department of corrections" for "department of corrections and human services"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective July 1, 1995.

Because of the repeal of 2-15-2104, the Code Commissioner has codified the deletion of the Board, and because of the deletion of adult day-care centers, in the definition of health care facility, the Code Commissioner has not inserted the alphabetized relocation of adult day-care centers contained in Ch. 418.

Chapter 590 throughout section substituted references to individuals for references to persons; in definition of long-term care facility, at end of first sentence after "personal care", deleted "to more than four persons who are not related to the owner or administrator by blood or marriage"; in definition of personal care, after "care", deleted "which do not require nursing skills"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective July 1, 1994.

1993 Statement of Intent: The statement of intent attached to Ch. 151, L. 1993, provided: "A statement of intent is necessary for this bill because it grants the department of health and environmental sciences [now department of public health and human services] the authority to adopt by rule specific licensing standards for residential hospice and inpatient hospice facilities.

It is the intent of the legislature that the department adopt rules for licensure of residential and inpatient hospice facilities to ensure that:

(1) hospice facilities are constrained to a certain standard of care;

(2) hospice facilities are managed and operated by hospice-trained staff or volunteers; and

(3) policies and procedures are in keeping with the hospice approach to care and with current trends in hospice care.

It is the intent of the legislature that the department adopt rules for inpatient hospice facilities that reflect applicable, current federal regulations and that the department go beyond adoption of existing relevant federal regulations for inpatient hospice facilities and provide for two levels of site-based hospice services. It is the intent of the legislature to ensure that residential and inpatient hospice facilities are integrated within a comprehensive, licensed hospice program."

Applicability: Section 7, Ch. 590, L. 1993, provided: "[Sections 1 through 4] [50-5-101, 50-5-226, 50-5-227, and 50-5-301] and the rules of the department of health and environmental sciences [now department of public health and human services] adopted pursuant to [sections 2 and 3] [50-5-226 and 50-5-227] apply to licenses for personal-care facilities issued or renewed after July 1, 1994."

1991 Amendments — Instructions to Code Commissioner: The Code Commissioner changed "department of institutions" to "department of corrections and human services", pursuant to sec. 1, Ch. 262, L. 1991, directing the Code Commissioner to make the change wherever necessary in the Montana Code Annotated. Amendment effective July 1, 1991.

Chapter 764 inserted definition of residential psychiatric care; and in definition of residential treatment facility, after "a facility", deleted "of not less than 30 beds that is", after "operated" deleted "by a nonprofit corporation or association", and after "providing" substituted "residential psychiatric care" for "long-term treatment services for mental illness in a nonhospital-based residential setting". Amendment effective July 1, 1991.

Termination Provisions Repealed — Effective Date: (1) Section 1, Ch. 184, L. 1991, repealed sec. 3, Ch. 377, L. 1989, which terminated 50-5-301, 50-5-302, 50-5-304 through 50-5-310, and sec. 13, Ch. 329, L. 1983, and amended 50-5-101 and 50-5-106, effective July 1, 1991.

(2) Section 1, Ch. 184, L. 1991, repealed sec. 9, Ch. 477, L. 1987, which terminated 50-5-301, 50-5-302, 50-5-304 through 50-5-309, and sec. 13, Ch. 329, L. 1983, and amended 50-5-101 and 50-5-106, effective July 1, 1989.

(3) Section 1, Ch. 184, L. 1991, repealed sec. 13, Ch. 329, L. 1983, which terminated 50-5-301, 50-5-302, and 50-5-304 through 50-5-309, and amended 50-5-101 and 50-5-106, effective July 1, 1987.

(4) Section 1, Ch. 184, L. 1991, became effective July 1, 1991.

1989 Amendments: Chapter 330 in definition of long-term care facility substituted "persons with severe disabilities" for "physically disabled persons" and after "under" substituted "53-19-203" (renumbered 52-4-203) for "53-19-111". Amendment effective July 1, 1989.

Chapter 616 near end of definition of health care facility or facility inserted "residential treatment facilities"; and inserted definition of residential treatment facility. Amendment effective July 1, 1989.

Termination Extension: Sections 2 and 3, Ch. 377, L. 1989, amended the provisions that would terminate the temporary version of this section to extend the temporary version until July 1, 1991.

1987 Amendments: Chapter 370 in definition of long-term care facility, near middle of second sentence, substituted "youth care facilities" for "boarding or foster homes for children".

Chapter 450 in definition of health care facility added "medical assistance facilities"; and inserted definition of medical assistance facility.

Chapter 477 in definition of affected person, after "applicant", inserted "for certificate of need" and at end deleted "including any agency qualifying as a health systems agency pursuant to Title XV of the Public Health Service Act"; in definition of batch, after "intent", substituted "to seek approval for new beds or major medical equipment" for "and applications of a specified category and within a specified region of the state, as established by department rule"; in definition of batching period, after "intent", substituted "to seek approval for new beds or major medical equipment are" for "for specified categories of new institutional health services and for specified regions of the state may be"; in definition of capital expenditure inserted (b) that reads:

"a lease, donation, or comparable arrangement that would be a capital expenditure if money or any other property of value had changed hands"; inserted definition of chemical dependency facility; in definition of comparative review, following "need applications", deleted "within a given batch"; in definition of health maintenance organization, after "means", substituted language that reads: "a public or private organization that provides or arranges for health care services to enrollees on a prepaid or other financial basis, either directly through provider employees or through contractual or other arrangements with a provider or group of providers" for former language that read: "a public or private organization organized as defined in 42 U.S.C. 300e, as amended"; deleted definition of health systems agency; at end of definition of major medical equipment inserted "and costs a substantial sum of money"; at end of definition of state health plan, after "department", substituted remainder of subsection that reads: "to project the need for health care facilities within Montana and approved by the statewide health coordinating council and the governor" for "pursuant to 42 U.S.C. 300m 2(a)(2)"; and made minor changes in phraseology.

Severability: Section 13, Ch. 477, L. 1987, was a severability section.

1985 Amendment: In definition of "Long-term care facility", near middle after "53-20-305" inserted "community homes for physically disabled persons licensed under 53-19-111", and after "for children licensed under" substituted "41-3-1142" for "41-3-503".

1983 Amendments: Chapter 324, in definition of "Health care facility" in third sentence following "home health agencies" inserted "hospices,"; and inserted definition of "Hospice" in both versions of section.

Chapter 329, near middle of definition of "Affected persons" in temporary version, after "facilities" inserted "third-party payers who reimburse health care facilities in the area affected by the proposal,"; inserted definitions of "Batch", "Batching period", "capital expenditure", "challenge period", and "comparative review" in temporary version; at end of definition of "construction" in temporary version, inserted "or remodeling, replacement, or renovation of an existing health care facility"; in both versions after definition of ""Health care facility"" inserted "or "facility""; inserted definition of "Health systems agency" in both versions; deleted from both versions definition, which read: ""New institutional health services" means:

(a) the construction, development, or other establishment of a health care facility which did not previously exist;

(b) any expenditure by or on behalf of a health care facility within a 12-month period in excess of $150,000, which, under generally accepted accounting principles consistently applied, is a capital expenditure. Whenever a health care facility or a person on behalf of a health care facility makes an acquisition under lease or comparable arrangement or through donation, which would have required review if the acquisition had been by purchase, such acquisition shall be considered a capital expenditure subject to review.

(c) a change in bed capacity of a health care facility which increases or decreases the total number of beds, redistributes beds among various service categories, or relocates such beds from one physical facility or site to another over a 2-year period by more than 10 beds or 10% of the total licensed bed capacity, whichever is less;

(d) health services which are offered in or through a health care facility and which were not offered on a regular basis in or through such health care facility within the 12-month period prior to the time such services would be offered or the deletion by a health care facility of a service previously offered;

(e) the expansion of a geographic service area of a home health agency."; inserted definition of "Major medical equipment" in temporary version; deleted from both versions definition, which read: ""State plan" means the state medical facility plan provided for in part 4."; and inserted definition of "State health plan" in both versions.

Section 13(3) of Ch. 329 provides that on July 1, 1987, the following definitions are deleted: "Affected persons", "Batch", "Batching period", "Capital expenditure", "Certificate of need", "Challenge period", "Comparative review", "Construction", "Major medical equipment".

Chapter 597, in definition of "Long-term care facility" in both versions, increased number of persons not related to owner or administrator from three to four.

Chapter 641, in (a) of definition of "Long-term care facility" in both versions after "intermediate nursing care" inserted "or intermediate developmental disability care"; after "blood or marriage" deleted "with those degrees of care defined as follows" and inserted last sentence beginning "The term does not ..."; inserted (d) defining "Intermediate developmental disability care"; and deleted former (b), which read: "Hotels, motels, boarding homes, roominghouses, or similar accommodations providing for transients, students, or persons not requiring institutional health care are not long-term care facilities."

1983 Statement of Intent: The statement of intent attached to HB 299 (Ch. 641, L. 1983) provided: "A statement of intent is necessary for House Bill 299 because it grants the Department of Health and Environmental Sciences [now Department of Public Health and Human Services] the authority to adopt, by rule, specific licensing standards for facilities providing nursing care, as well as other services, to the developmentally disabled.

It is the intent of the Legislature that the standards adopted for such facilities be substantially the same as those federal standards contained in 42 Code of Federal Regulations, Part 442, Subpart G, "Standards for Intermediate Care Facilities for the Mentally Retarded". Those standards include necessary administrative policies and procedures; admission and release criteria; personnel policies; resident living standards; requirements for professional and special programs and services; dental service requirements; necessary administrative services; safety and sanitation requirement; required recordkeeping; and requirements for services in the following areas: training and habilitation, food and nutrition, medical services, nursing, pharmacy, physical and occupational therapy, psychological services, recreation, social services, speech pathology, and audiology."

Chapter 433 added definitions of "accreditation", "clinical laboratory", and "college of American pathologists".

Both chapters added an identical definition of "accreditation".

Case Notes

Outpatient Clinic Not Considered Hospital for Property Tax Exemption Purposes: Applying the definitions set out in this section, the District Court properly found (prior to the 1999 amendment of this section) that an outpatient clinic was not a hospital and was not entitled to property tax exemptions under 15-6-201 for property used "for hospital purposes". Dept. of Revenue v. Gallatin Outpatient Clinic, Inc., 234 M 425, 763 P2d 1128, 45 St. Rep. 2025 (1988).

Attorney General's Opinions

Funding of Private, Nonprofit Nursing Home by Hospital District Allowed: A hospital district may fund a private, nonprofit nursing home operating for the benefit of county residents if the home complies with the admission standards set out in 7-34-2123, provides the kinds of facilities that are reasonable and appropriate in advancing public health as outlined in this section, and meets other legal requirements concerning the operation of a long-term care facility. 43 A.G. Op. 70 (1990).

2013 Amendment: Chapter 157 in (4)(a) substituted "an entity listed in subsection (4)(b)" for "the joint commission on accreditation of health care organizations"; inserted (4)(b) concerning a hospital's evidence of its accreditation; in (5) after "the joint commission" deleted "on accreditation of healthcare organizations"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective October 1, 2013.

2003 Amendment: Chapter 401 inserted (7) authorizing department to consider for license eligibility during accreditation period any outpatient center for surgical services that provides written evidence of accreditation by ambulatory health care accreditation association and authorizing inspection to ensure compliance with state standards; inserted (8) authorizing department to consider for license eligibility during accreditation period any behavioral treatment program, chemical dependency treatment program, residential treatment facility, or mental health center that provides written evidence of accreditation by ambulatory health care accreditation association and authorizing inspection to ensure compliance with state standards; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective October 1, 2003.

1997 Amendments: Chapter 99 in first sentence of (4) and (5) inserted "located in this state"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective March 19, 1997.

Chapter 188 inserted (6) regarding consideration of licensure eligibility during the accreditation period and inspection of a facility to ensure compliance with state standards; and made minor changes in style.

1995 Amendment: Chapter 366 in (4), near beginning after "evidence", inserted "required by the department".

1993 Amendment: Chapter 415 in (1) and (3), at end, substituted "parts 1 and 2" for "parts 1 through 4"; in (4), in first sentence after "accreditation of", substituted "health care organizations" for "hospitals" and at end inserted "for purposes of the licensing process", in second sentence, near beginning after "may", inserted "in addition to its inspection authority in 50-5-116", and in third sentence, near middle, substituted "specific complaint made in writing pertaining to licensing requirements" for "such complaint"; and made minor changes in style.

1991 Amendment: Inserted (5) authorizing Department to consider as eligible for licensure any health care facility, other than a hospital, accredited by the Joint Commission on Accreditation of Health Care Organizations. Amendment effective July 1, 1991.

1981 Amendment: Added (4) relating to eligibility for licensure and exemption from inspection for hospitals accredited by the Joint Commission on Accreditation of Hospitals.

Statement of Intent: The statement of intent adopted with Ch. 347, L. 1979, provided: "A statement of intent is required for this bill because it delegates rulemaking authority to the Department of Health and Environmental Sciences [now Department of Public Health and Human Services]. This bill is intended to expand the authority of the Department of Health and Environmental Sciences [now Department of Public Health and Human Services] to license health care facilities in order to cover additional health care facilities, and to revise the requirements of specific health care facilities to obtain a certificate of need. Generally the Department of Health and Environmental Sciences [now Department of Public Health and Human Services] is intended to have the authority to amend and update existing licensure rules and to adopt new rules for licensure to conform with the mandates of P.L. 92-603 and the Social Security Act, titles V, XVIII, and XIX.

In the same spirit, the Department may write and adopt rules, in accordance with the Montana Administrative Procedure Act, to insure the implementation of a state certificate of need program which meets the minimum standards of P.L. 93-641, the National Health Planning and Resources Development Act, and which is acceptable to the Secretary of the Department of Health, Education and Welfare. This program is aimed at insuring that only new institutional health services, expenditures in excess of $150,000 made to prepare for a new institutional health service, or arrangements and commitments made to finance a new institutional health service which are found by the Department of Health and Environmental Sciences [now Department of Public Health and Human Services] to be needed may be granted a certificate of need and that only those services which are granted a certificate of need may be offered to the public.

Section 2 is the primary, broad-based source of rulemaking authority for the entire chapter. Insofar as licensing and certification of health care facilities are concerned (Title 50, chapter 5, part 2), this section does not add any new discretionary authority beyond that already authorized for the Department, with the exception that this section is intended to allow the setting of certification standards for additional types of health care facilities, such as health maintenance organizations and adult day care centers not currently covered by law. This section is not intended to expand the existing rulemaking authority under part 4 except for rules specific to the additional health care facilities that will be covered.

Section 2 is intended to clearly authorize rulemaking authority to implement part 3. As a minimum, it is intended that the Department may adopt rules covering the following:

1. procedures and assurances required by 42 CFR 123.401 through 42 CFR 123.411 and any subsequent rules replacing or augmenting them;

2. procedures to be followed during the review process, including any interrelationships with review being conducted by a health systems agency; and

3. the effect on an application for certificate of need if the Department fails to decide whether to approve or disapprove the application within the time period set for review.

Section 5 is intended to allow the Department to require health care facilities to keep records and file reports with the Department containing information relevant to licensing, certification, statewide health planning, and resources development.

Section 9 is not intended to be construed to add new rulemaking authority beyond what is currently authorized for the Department. The rules referred to in the section refer to federal rules implementing the federal statute cited in this section.

Section 10 is intended to retain existing authority to set licensing standards except that these standards may be set for the new types of health care facilities added by this bill.

Section 13 is intended to authorize the Department to prescribe by rule the form of letters of intent and applications for certificate of need and to specify what information should be provided in each. This is further specific authority for rules governing a portion of the review process. The procedure for the entire review process is intended to be detailed under the authority delegated by Section 2.

Section 14 is explicit as to what review criteria, required findings, and standards must be included in Department rules adopted to implement the act; however, the Department may, within the scope of this section, adopt rules to more clearly define the criteria enumerated in this section.

Section 15 allows the Department to establish by rule what will constitute 'good cause' to extend the period for which a certificate of need is valid.

Section 16 is intended to permit the Department to define what will constitute 'good cause' to grant a reconsideration hearing, in order to prevent hearings based on frivolous grounds and to contain administrative costs. This section is also intended to authorize additional specific procedures for administrative hearings, at both the Department and Board levels, than are provided in the Montana Administrative Procedure Act but which are consistent with the provisions of MAPA.

Section 20 is intended to apply specifically to Title 50, chapter 5, part 4, and does not broaden existing rulemaking authority except where it applies to the new types of health care facilities added by this bill."

Case Notes

No Abuse of Discretion in Denial of Hospital's Request for Preliminary Injunction Against Opening Other Hospital Based on Lack of Irreparable Injury and Public Participation: Plaintiff hospital sought a preliminary injunction against defendant partnership to keep the partnership from opening another hospital in Great Falls, based on potential irreparable injury and on the lack of public participation in the licensing process. The District Court denied the injunction. On appeal, the Supreme Court found that plaintiff failed to present evidence demonstrating that plaintiff would suffer some injury that would be irremediable by a future award of legal or other equitable relief. Additionally, the District Court relied on Kadillak v. The Anaconda Co., 184 M 127, 602 P2d 147 (1979), for the proposition that there is no independent right of public participation in an agency's decisionmaking process when the Legislature has not provided for participation. The Supreme Court noted that the state has been given very limited statutory direction in licensing hospitals and that there is no express statutory requirement for the state to permit public participation in licensing matters, concluding that whatever the state's obligations are in evaluating hospital license applications, plaintiff did not demonstrate that those obligations were clearly violated. Staying within the limits of review of a denial of a request for a preliminary injunction without reaching the merits of the underlying case, the Supreme Court concluded that the District Court did not manifestly abuse its discretion in denying the preliminary injunction, and the District Court was affirmed. 1995 Amendment: Chapter 366 in (1), near beginning after "application", inserted "and notice that the facility is ready to be inspected"; and made minor changes in style.

1991 Amendment: In (1), near beginning after "new", deleted "or renewal" and at end substituted "conduct an initial inspection of the facility within 45 days" for "inspect the facility without prior notice to the operator or staff"; inserted (2) governing inspection after receipt of an application; and at end of (3) substituted "a period of 1 to 3 years in duration" for "1 year".

1987 Amendment: At end of (1) inserted "without prior notice to the operator or staff".

1985 Amendment: Substituted (1) through (4) relating to the issuance and renewal of licenses for former (1) that read: "After receipt of a new or renewal application and a determination by the department that the facility meets minimum standards and the proposed or existing staff is qualified, the department shall issue a license for 1 year. If minimum standards are not met, the department may issue a provisional license for less than 1 year if operation will not result in undue hazard to patients or residents or if the demand for accommodations offered is not met in the community. The minimum standards which home health agencies must meet in order to be licensed shall be as outlined in 42 U.S.C. 1395 x(o), as amended, and in rules implementing it which add minimum standards"; deleted former (2) and (3) that read: "(2) The department must inspect a new facility before an initial license is granted.

(3) An application for renewal of a license must be accompanied by a report, on forms provided by the department, containing such information as the department considers necessary to determine whether minimum standards are being met"; and substituted (5) relating to the time of inspection and access requirements for former (4) that read: "The department may inspect a licensed health care facility whenever it considers it necessary and shall inspect each licensed facility at least once within the 3 years following the date of its last inspection. The entire premises of a licensed facility shall be open to inspection, and access to all records shall be granted at all reasonable times."

1981 Special Session Amendment: Substituted first sentence of (1) that read: "After receipt of a new or renewal application and a determination by the department that the facility meets minimum standards and the proposed or existing staff is qualified, the department shall issue a license for 1 year" for "On receipt of a new or renewal application, the department or its authorized agent shall inspect the facility. If minimum standards are met and the proposed staff is qualified, the department shall issue a license for 1 year"; inserted (2) and (3) (see 1985 amendment note for text); inserted (4), which read: "The department may inspect a licensed health care facility whenever it considers it necessary and shall inspect each licensed facility at least once within the 3 years following the date of its last inspection. The entire premises of a licensed facility shall be open to inspection, and access to all records shall be granted at all reasonable times"; inserted language from former (2) as last sentence of (4); and substituted "The entire premises of a licensed facility" for "Licensed premises" in last sentence of (4).

50-5-210. Department to make rules — standards for hospices.

Compiler's Comments

1993 Amendment: Chapter 151 inserted (3) requiring establishment of standards for licensure of a residential hospice facility; inserted (4) requiring establishment of standards for licensure of a freestanding inpatient hospice facility; and made minor changes in style.

1993 Statement of Intent: The statement of intent attached to Ch. 151, L. 1993, provided: "A statement of intent is necessary for this bill because it grants the department of health and environmental sciences [now department of public health and human services] the authority to adopt by rule specific licensing standards for residential hospice and inpatient hospice facilities.

It is the intent of the legislature that the department adopt rules for licensure of residential and inpatient hospice facilities to ensure that:

(1) hospice facilities are constrained to a certain standard of care;

(2) hospice facilities are managed and operated by hospice-trained staff or volunteers; and

(3) policies and procedures are in keeping with the hospice approach to care and with current trends in hospice care.

It is the intent of the legislature that the department adopt rules for inpatient hospice facilities that reflect applicable, current federal regulations and that the department go beyond adoption of existing relevant federal regulations for inpatient hospice facilities and provide for two levels of site-based hospice services. It is the intent of the legislature to ensure that residential and inpatient hospice facilities are integrated within a comprehensive, licensed hospice program."

1983 Statement of Intent: The statement of intent attached to SB 208 (Ch. 324, L. 1983) provided: "Section 2 authorizes the department of health and environmental sciences [now department of public health and human services] to adopt rules setting standards for hospice programs. It is anticipated that the department will draw on the Hospice Project Standards being formulated by the Joint Commission on Accreditation of Hospitals (JCAH), which cover hospice programs operated both with and without hospital affiliation. The JCAH standards expand on areas mentioned in section 2 (patient and family as unit, continuity of care, management and administration) and touch on additional areas when standards are contemplated (such as symptom management, medical records, and quality assurance). The department should bear in mind that many of the JCAH standards are optimum standards or goals and that these should not be promulgated as minimum standards. Where minimum standards or weighted averages exist, these should be taken into account.

The bill is not intended as a vehicle to qualify hospice programs for medicare reimbursement. Such program standards as the federal government may establish to qualify medicare providers are not to be considered a source of state licensing criteria, except as an alternative standard for programs which choose to pursue medicare reimbursement."

2003 Amendment: Chapter 54 in (1) at beginning substituted "An assisted living facility" for "A personal-care facility"; in (2) substituted language restricting a category A assisted living facility from admitting or retaining a category A resident unless certain conditions are met for former language that read: "A resident of a personal-care facility licensed as a category A facility under 50-5-227 may obtain third-party provider services for skilled nursing care for no more than 20 consecutive days at a time"; in (3) substituted language restricting a category B assisted living facility from admitting or retaining a category B resident unless certain conditions are met for former language that read: "A resident of a personal-care facility licensed as a category B facility under 50-5-227 must have a signed statement from a physician agreeing to the resident's admission to the facility if the resident is:

(a) in need of skilled nursing care;

(b) in need of medical, physical, or chemical restraint;

(c) nonambulatory or bedridden;

(d) incontinent to the extent that bowel or bladder control is absent; or

(e) unable to self-administer medications"; in (3)(f) substituted language concerning a health care assessment by a licensed health care professional for former language that read: "A resident of a category B personal-care facility who needs skilled nursing care must have a signed statement, renewed on a quarterly basis by a physician, a physician assistant-certified, an advanced practice registered nurse, or a registered nurse, whose work is unrelated to the operation of the facility and who"; in (3)(f)(i) substituted "assessment" for "statement"; inserted (4) restricting a category C assisted living facility from admitting or retaining a category C resident unless certain conditions are met; inserted (5) requiring an assisted living facility to specify services that will be provided to category B and C residents; in (6) near beginning of first sentence after "provide to the" substituted "assisted living" for "personal-care" and after "and to the" substituted "licensed health care professionals" for "physicians, physician assistants-certified, advanced practice registered nurses, or registered nurses"; in (7)(a) near end after "resident's" substituted "practitioner" for "physician"; in (7)(a)(i) after "residents of" substituted "assisted living" for "personal-care"; in (7)(b) at end inserted reference to subsection (4); in (7)(d) near beginning after "category A" substituted "assisted living" for "personal-care" and at end inserted "and the storage and administration of over-the-counter and prescription medications"; in (7)(e) near beginning after "category B" substituted "assisted living" for "personal-care", after "category A" substituted "assisted living" for "personal-care", near middle after "training of staff" deleted "restraint use and reduction", and at end after "care" deleted "and the storage and administration of drugs"; inserted (7)(f) requiring rules addressing standards for operating a category C assisted living facility"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective October 1, 2003.

2001 Amendment: Chapter 331 in (4) substituted "an advanced practice registered nurse" for "a nurse practitioner"; inserted (5) concerning standardized forms and education and training materials for personal-care facilities; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective October 1, 2001.

Department Review: Section 2, Ch. 331, L. 2001, provided: "(1) The legislature finds that an increasing number of individuals require personal-care services and that it is in the best interest of individuals who reside in personal-care facilities:

(a) to remain in those facilities and to age in place while having their health, medical, and social needs met;

(b) for the department to provide some flexibility in the regulation of personal-care facilities; and

(c) for the department to educate the personal-care facilities and health care professionals about the regulations.

(2) The department shall review all rules adopted pursuant to 50-5-226, in conjunction with consumers and providers of personal care, to determine any necessary changes that may be needed to the rules or the laws that they implement. The department shall consider the following, including but not limited to:

(a) the appropriate size of category A and category B personal-care facilities;

(b) the flexibility in the oversight and regulation of personal-care facilities based on the needs of the individuals who reside in the personal-care facilities in order to allow individuals to safely remain in those facilities and age in place; and

(c) the extent to which the rules specify provider qualifications, sufficient staff training requirements, and sufficient physician involvement in the care of the individuals in personal-care facilities.

(3) The department shall present its findings, recommendations, and any suggested legislation to the children, families, health, and human services interim committee by September 15, 2002, and to the legislature as provided in 5-11-210." Section 2 is effective October 1, 2001, and pursuant to sec. 3, Ch. 331, L. 2001, terminates June 30, 2003.

1995 Amendments: Chapter 366 in (4), near beginning after "resident of a", inserted "category B", after "renewed on" deleted "an annual basis for a category A facility and on", and after "quarterly basis" substituted "by" for "for a category B facility, from"; and in (4)(a), after

"within the", deleted "year covered by the statement for a category A facility and within the" and at end deleted "for a category B facility".

Chapter 546 in (5), after "shall", deleted "in consultation with the department of social and rehabilitation services". Amendment effective July 1, 1995.

Saving Clause: Section 571, Ch. 546, L. 1995, was a saving clause.

1993 Amendment: Chapter 590 substituted (1) through (4) concerning residents of various categories of facilities for former (1) that read: "A personal-care facility may not have as a resident a person who is:

(a) in need of medical or physical restraints;

(b) nonambulatory or bedridden;

(c) totally incontinent; or

(d) less than 18 years of age"; in (5)(b), at end, substituted "individuals referred to in subsection (3)" for "persons prohibited by subsection (1)"; in (5)(c) substituted "subsection (5)(b)" for "subsection (2)(b)"; inserted (5)(d) and (5)(e) concerning standards for category A and category B facilities; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective July 1, 1994.

1993 Statement of Intent: The statement of intent attached to Ch. 590, L. 1993, provided: "A statement of intent is required for this bill because 50-5-226 requires the department of health and environmental sciences [now department of public health and human services] to adopt standards governing personal-care facilities and because 50-5-227 requires the department to adopt rules implementing two categories of personal-care facilities.

The legislature intends that the standards to be adopted under 50-5-226 involve only those basic aspects of care that are not already part of local ordinances and that the rules do not overregulate or require more than absolutely necessary for the safety of the residents because, in many instances, the facilities in which residents will live are the homes of those persons managing them.

The legislature recognizes a preference by many senior citizens and their relatives for seniors to live in a home setting in a private home or residence rather than in a nursing home. The legislature further recognizes that there are a number of persons in this state who are willing to care for seniors in their own homes or in homes operated by them in which the home setting is preserved. The legislature further recognizes that the quality of care given in these homes or residences may be preferable under many circumstances because the patient-to-staff ratio is considerably lower than in a nursing home and the home setting avoids the institutional atmosphere and associated problems.

Finally, the legislature recognizes that these homes can be considerably less expensive than nursing homes. Therefore, the legislature specifically finds that the use of private homes or residences in which the home setting is preserved is to be recognized as the preferred treatment for all persons who can receive adequate care in such a facility."

Applicability: Section 7, Ch. 590, L. 1993, provided: "[Sections 1 through 4] [50-5-101, 50-5-226, 50-5-227, and 50-5-301] and the rules of the department of health and environmental sciences [now department of public health and human services] adopted pursuant to [sections 2 and 3] [50-5-226 and 50-5-227] apply to licenses for personal-care facilities issued or renewed after July 1, 1994."

1983 Statement of Intent: The statement of intent attached to SB 446 (Ch. 597, L. 1983) provided: "Senate Bill 446 requires a statement of intent because section 3 requires the Department of Health and Environmental Sciences [now Department of Public Health and Human Services] to adopt standards for operation and licensing of personal-care facilities, and license, inspection, and patient screening fees. It is the intent of the Legislature that when the Department adopts rules to implement provisions of SB 446 that it utilize the report to the 48th Legislature by the Legislative advisory committee on Joint Resolution 34 and that the rules:

1. assure that licensees meet applicable fire, sanitation, building, and service standards;
2. provide as expeditious a licensing procedure as possible;
3. set inspection and patient screening fees that recover but do not exceed the costs of inspection and patient screening; and
4. include other state agencies in the development of those rules which fall in their areas of expertise and responsibility. While SB 446 prohibits direct provision of nursing services by the personal-care or roominghouse/retirement home licensee, there is no intent to prevent those services from being delivered by any provider legally authorized to do so, consistent with the provisions of this act."

Title 37, chapter 106, subchapter 8, ARM Licensing of specialty hospitals.

No Abuse of Discretion in Denial of Hospital's Request for Preliminary Injunction Against Opening Other Hospital Based on Lack of Irreparable Injury and Public Participation: Plaintiff hospital sought a preliminary injunction against defendant partnership to keep the partnership from opening another hospital in Great Falls, based on potential irreparable injury and on the lack of public participation in the licensing process. The District Court denied the injunction. On appeal, the Supreme Court found that plaintiff failed to present evidence demonstrating that plaintiff would suffer some injury that would be irremediable by a future award of legal or other equitable relief. Additionally, the District Court relied on Kadillak v. The Anaconda Co., 184 M 127, 602 P2d 147 (1979), for the proposition that there is no independent right of public participation in an agency's decisionmaking process when the Legislature has not provided for participation. The Supreme Court noted that the state has been given very limited statutory direction in licensing hospitals and that there is no express statutory requirement for the state to permit public participation in licensing matters, concluding that whatever the state's obligations are in evaluating hospital license applications, plaintiff did not demonstrate that those obligations were clearly violated. Staying within the limits of review of a denial of a request for a preliminary injunction without reaching the merits of the underlying case, the Supreme Court concluded that the District Court did not manifestly abuse its discretion in denying the preliminary injunction, and the District Court was affirmed. 2003 Amendment: Chapter 114 in (2)(a)(ii) substituted "licensed addiction" for "chemical dependency". Amendment effective October 1, 2003.

2001 Amendment: Chapter 286 in (1)(h) after "services for" deleted "ambulatory surgical care through an outpatient center for surgical services, as defined in subsection (2)(a)" and after "dependency treatment" deleted "or inpatient rehabilitation"; inserted (1)(i) prohibiting construction, development, or other establishment of a facility for ambulatory surgical care through an outpatient center for surgical services in a county with a population of 20,000 without a certificate of need; in (2)(a) at end of first sentence after "dependency facility" deleted "rehabilitation facility with inpatient services, or outpatient center for surgical services that has or is intended to qualify for medicare certification as an ambulatory surgical center pursuant to 42 CFR, part 416"; inserted (2)(a)(iii) excluding a rehabilitation facility or an outpatient center for surgical services from the definition of health care facility; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective April 20, 2001.

1999 Amendment: Chapter 98 in (1)(h) inserted "through an outpatient center for surgical services, as defined in subsection (2)(a)"; in (2)(a) near beginning after "nonfederal" deleted "ambulatory surgical facility" and inserted "or outpatient center for surgical services that has or is intended to qualify for medicare certification as an ambulatory surgical center pursuant to 42 CFR, part 416"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective October 1, 1999.

Applicability: Section 7, Ch. 98, L. 1999, provided: "[This act] applies to health care facility licenses or certificates of need issued pursuant to Title 50, chapter 5, after October 1, 1999."

1997 Amendment: Chapter 93 in (1)(a), in first sentence after "expenditure", inserted "that exceeds $1.5 million" and after "existing health care facility" deleted "or to replace major medical equipment with equipment performing substantially the same function and in the same manner, that exceeds the expenditure thresholds established in subsection (4)" and in second sentence, after "plant", deleted "or equipment" and at end substituted "exceeds $1.5 million" for "exceeds the expenditure thresholds"; at end of (1)(b)(i) substituted "and no beds have been added or relocated during the 2 years prior to the date the letter of intent for the proposal is received" for "in any 2-year period"; at end of (1)(b)(iii) substituted "state health care facilities plan" for "state health plan"; deleted former (1)(d) that read: "(d) the acquisition by any person of major medical equipment, provided the acquisition would have required a certificate of need pursuant to subsection (1)(a) or (1)(c) if it had been made by or on behalf of a health care facility";in (1)(h), after "long-term care", deleted "inpatient mental health care"; deleted former (2) that read: "(2) For purposes of subsection (1)(b), a change in bed capacity occurs on the date new or relocated beds are licensed pursuant to part 2 of this chapter and the date a final decision is made to grant a certificate of need for new or relocated beds, unless the certificate of need expires pursuant to 50-5-305"; in (2)(a), after "long-term care facility", deleted "medical assistance facility, mental health center with inpatient services" and after "facility with inpatient services" deleted "or residential treatment facility"; deleted (3)(c) that read: "(c) "Obligation for capital expenditure" does not include the authorization of bond sales or the offering or sale of bonds pursuant to the state long-range building program under Title 17, chapter 5, part 4, and Title 18, chapter 2, part 1"; deleted (4) that read: "(4) Expenditure thresholds for certificate of need review are established as follows:

(a) For acquisition of equipment and the construction of any building necessary to house the equipment, the expenditure threshold is $750,000.

(b) For construction of health care facilities, the expenditure threshold is $1,500,000"; deleted (5) that read: "(5) This section may not be construed to require a health care facility to obtain a certificate of need to undertake any activity that would not be subject to a certificate of need if undertaken by a person other than a health care facility"; inserted (3) concerning construction of the section regarding nonreviewable service; adjusted subsection references; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective March 19, 1997.

1995 Amendments — Phrase Change: Section 21, Ch. 255, L. 1995, directed the Code Commissioner to change references in the MCA to a person who is developmentally disabled or to a developmentally disabled person to a person with developmental disabilities. The change was not to be made to the phrase "seriously developmentally disabled". In (3)(b)(ii), the Code Commissioner has made the change.

Chapter 366 in (3)(b)(ii), near beginning after "include", substituted "residential care facilities, as defined in 50-5-101" for "adult foster care, licensed under 52-3-303".

Chapter 398 near beginning of (1)(h) inserted "in excess of five"; and inserted (5) providing that the section cannot be construed to require a facility to obtain a certificate of need for an activity that would not need a certificate if done by a person other than a facility. Amendment effective April 12, 1995.

Chapter 546 at end of (3)(b)(ii) substituted "department of corrections" for "department of corrections and human services"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective July 1, 1995.

1993 Amendment: Chapter 590 at end of (1)(i) deleted "or personal care"; in (3)(a), at end of first sentence, deleted "or personal care facility"; in (3)(b)(i) and (3)(b)(ii) substituted "individuals" for "persons"; deleted (3)(d) that read: "(d) "Personal care facility" means an entity which provides services and care which do not require nursing skills to more than four persons who are not related to the owner or administrator by blood or marriage and who need some assistance in performing the activities of everyday living. The term does not include those entities excluded from the definition of "long-term care facility" in subsection (3)(b)"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective July 1, 1994.

Applicability: Section 7, Ch. 590, L. 1993, provided: "[Sections 1 through 4] [50-5-101, 50-5-226, 50-5-227, and 50-5-301] and the rules of the department of health and environmental sciences [now department of public health and human services] adopted pursuant to [sections 2 and 3] [50-5-226 and 50-5-227] apply to licenses for personal-care facilities issued or renewed after July 1, 1994."

1991 Amendments — Instructions to Code Commissioner: Chapter 244 inserted (3)(a)(ii) to exclude offices of private physicians, dentists, or other health care professionals from definition of health care facility.

The Code Commissioner changed "department of institutions" to "department of corrections and human services", pursuant to sec. 1, Ch. 262, L. 1991, directing the Code Commissioner to make the change wherever necessary in the Montana Code Annotated. Amendment effective July 1, 1991.

Chapter 764 in (3)(a), in definition of health care facility or facility, inserted "residential treatment facility". Amendment effective July 1, 1991.

Termination Provisions Repealed — Effective Date: (1) Section 1, Ch. 184, L. 1991, repealed sec. 3, Ch. 377, L. 1989, which terminated 50-5-301, 50-5-302, 50-5-304 through 50-5-310, and sec. 13, Ch. 329, L. 1983, and amended 50-5-101 and 50-5-106, effective July 1, 1991.

(2) Section 1, Ch. 184, L. 1991, repealed sec. 9, Ch. 477, L. 1987, which terminated 50-5-301, 50-5-302, 50-5-304 through 50-5-309, and sec. 13, Ch. 329, L. 1983, and amended 50-5-101 and 50-5-106, effective July 1, 1989.

(3) Section 1, Ch. 184, L. 1991, repealed sec. 13, Ch. 329, L. 1983, which terminated 50-5-301, 50-5-302, and 50-5-304 through 50-5-309, and amended 50-5-101 and 50-5-106, effective July 1, 1987.

(4) Section 1, Ch. 184, L. 1991, became effective July 1, 1991.

1989 Amendments: Chapter 330 in definition of long-term care facility substituted "persons with severe disabilities" for "physically disabled persons" and after "under" substituted "53-19-203" (renumbered 52-4-203) for "53-19-111". Amendment effective July 1, 1989.

Chapter 377 inserted (1)(i) requiring certificate of need before a hospital may provide ambulatory surgical care, home health care, long-term care, inpatient mental, chemical dependency, or rehabilitation care, or personal care; in (3)(a), after "home health agency", deleted "hospital" and inserted second sentence exempting hospitals from certificate of need requirements in certain circumstances; and made minor changes in style and punctuation. Amendment effective June 30, 1989.

1989 Statement of Intent: The statement of intent attached to Ch. 377, L. 1989, provided: "It is the legislature's intent to exclude acute care hospitals from certificate of need requirements, except in certain limited circumstances that are enumerated in subsections 50-5-301(1)(h) and 50-5-301(1)(i). The provision by a hospital of services under either of those subsections is intended to include construction, conversion, or expansion of bed capacity."

1987 Amendment: In (1)(a) inserted "or to replace major medical equipment with equipment performing substantially the same function and in the same manner" and changed reference to subsection (5) to reference to subsection (4); in (1)(b) substituted "through an increase in the number of beds or" for "by 10 beds or 10%, whichever is less, in any 2-year period through:

(i) an increase or decrease in the total number of beds;

(ii) a redistribution of beds among various categories; or

(iii)", before "facility" substituted "health care" for "physical", and at end inserted "unless"; inserted (1)(b)(i) through (1)(b)(iii) (see 1987 Session Law for text); near end of (1)(c) substituted "$150,000" for "$100,000"; in (1)(e) inserted "or persons", inserted "50% or more of", and at end substituted "unless" for "if"; in (1)(e)(i) substituted "submits the letter" for "has failed to submit the notice" and at end substituted "and" for "or"; in (1)(e)(ii), after "finds", deleted "within 30 days after it receives the notice of intent required by 50-5-302(3)" and after "will" substituted "not significantly increase the cost of care provided or increase bed capacity" for "result in a change in the services or bed capacity of the facility"; at end of (1)(f) inserted "by any person, including another type of health care facility"; inserted (1)(h), (2), (3)(a), (3)(b), and (3)(d) (see 1987 Session Law for text); deleted former (2)(b), (3), and (4) that read: "(b) a health maintenance organization is to be considered a health care facility except to the extent exempted from certificate of need requirements as prescribed in rules adopted by the department.

(3) A proposed change in a project associated with a capital expenditure under subsection (1)(a) or (1)(b) for which the department has previously issued a certificate of need requires subsequent certificate of need review if the change is proposed within 1 year after the date the activity for which the capital expenditure was granted a certificate of need is undertaken. As used in this subsection, a "change in project" includes but is not limited to any change in the bed capacity of a health care facility as described in subsection (1)(b) and the addition or termination of a health care service.

(4) If a person acquires an existing health care facility without a certificate of need and proposes to change, within 1 year after the acquisition, the services or bed capacity of the health care facility, the proposed change requires a certificate of need if one would have been required originally under subsection (1)(e)"; in (4)(a) inserted "and the construction of any building necessary to house the equipment" and substituted "$750,000" for "$500,000"; in (4)(b) substituted "$1,500,000" for "$750,000"; deleted former (5)(b) that read: "(b) The department may by rule establish thresholds higher than those established in subsection (5)(a) if necessary and appropriate to accomplish the objectives of this part"; and made minor changes in phraseology.

Coordination Instruction: Section 3, Ch. 450, L. 1987, a coordination instruction, in (3)(a) inserted "medical assistance facility" in list of facilities defined as health care facilities.

1987 Statement of Intent: The statement of intent attached to Ch. 477, L. 1987, provided: "A statement of intent is prepared for this bill because the committee [House Health and Human Services Committee] felt it was necessary to ensure compliance with legislative intent in furtherance of the extension of rulemaking authority provided in section 11.

The legislature contemplates that the department of health and environmental sciences [now department of public health and human services] will continue to monitor the effects of certificate of need and other factors that control capital expenditures and development of health care service capacity. By December 1, 1988, the department must provide for the 1989 legislature an evaluation of the need to continue the certificate of need program beyond June 30, 1989, and identify any alternative legislation that would be needed if certificate of need were to be discontinued. It is also this committee's intent that the legislative audit committee review and, if possible, make a performance audit of the certificate of need process and make its recommendation to the 1989 legislature."

1985 Amendment: At end of (1)(e)(i) substituted "50-5-302(2)" for "50-5-302(3)".

1983 Amendment: Substituted entire text (see 1983 Session Law) for former text, which read: "Unless an application has been submitted to and a certificate of need granted by the department, no person may initiate any of the following:

(1) a new institutional health service as defined in 50-5-101;

(2) any expenditure by or on behalf of a health care facility in excess of $150,000 made in preparation for the offering or development of a new institutional health service and any arrangement or commitment made for financing the offering or development of the new institutional health service. Expenditures made in the preparation for the offering of a new institutional health service shall include expenditures for architectural designs, preliminary plans, working drawings, specifications, studies, and surveys."

1997 Amendment: Chapter 93 deleted former (1)(c) that read: "(c) the abbreviated review of a proposal that:

(i) does not significantly affect the cost or use of health care;

(ii) is necessary to eliminate or prevent imminent safety hazards or to repair or replace a facility damaged or destroyed as a result of fire, storm, civil disturbance, or any act of God;

(iii) is necessary to comply with licensure or certification standards; or

(iv) would add a health service that is subject to a certificate of need review under 50-5-301(1)(c)"; at end of (4) substituted "proposals that are also subject to review" for "proposals unless, in the case of beds, the proposal is determined to be exempt from review"; in (7), in first sentence after "applicant", inserted "specifying" and after "information" inserted language requiring date by which additional information must be submitted to Department, inserted second sentence requiring Department to allow 15 days for submission of additional information, and in last sentence, after "complete and", inserted "if the application is still incomplete" and after "application is" deleted "complete or"; in (8), after "If", deleted "a proposal is to undergo comparative review with another proposal but"; in (9), after "send", substituted "either the request for additional information or the notice of incompleteness required by subsection (7)" for "the notices"; in (12), after "facilities", deleted "or equipment"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective March 19, 1997.

1995 Amendment: Chapter 398 in (1)(b), after "the scheduling", deleted "and consolidation"; at beginning of (1)(e) deleted "the establishment of batching periods for certificate of need applications for new beds and major medical equipment, challenge periods, and" and after "applications" deleted "from different batches"; at beginning of (4) substituted "The department may determine that the proposals should be comparatively reviewed with similar proposals" for "If the proposal is for new beds or major medical equipment, the department shall place the letter of intent in the appropriate batch"; in (5) inserted first sentence requiring the Department to publish a description of each letter of intent received during the prior month and in second sentence, at beginning, inserted "Within 30 days of the publication", in middle substituted "described in the publication" for "in a batch", after "must submit a" deleted "challenge", and at end substituted "requesting comparative review" for "at least by the end of the challenge period following the batching period for that batch"; in (7), in second sentence after "shall have", inserted "an additional" and at end deleted sentence allowing repetitive requests for additional information when the information submitted is incomplete and giving the Department 15 working days after each submission to send a notice that the application is complete or incomplete; at end of (8) substituted "is considered withdrawn" for "must be dropped from the current batch and assigned to the next batching period"; in (10), at beginning, deleted sentence providing that after an application is designated as complete, immediate notification must be sent to the applicant and all other affected persons regarding the Department's projected time schedule for review of the application and in first sentence, after "after the", substituted "application is initially received or, if the application is to be comparatively reviewed as provided in subsection (5), within 90 days after all applications to be comparatively reviewed are received" for "notice is sent or, if a challenging application has been submitted as provided in subsection (5), within 90 days after the notice has been sent for all such challenging applications"; and at end of (14) substituted "issue the certificate of need" for "render a decision". Amendment effective April 12, 1995.

Termination Provisions Repealed — Effective Date: (1) Section 1, Ch. 184, L. 1991, repealed sec. 3, Ch. 377, L. 1989, which terminated 50-5-301, 50-5-302, 50-5-304 through 50-5-310, and sec. 13, Ch. 329, L. 1983, and amended 50-5-101 and 50-5-106, effective July 1, 1991.

(2) Section 1, Ch. 184, L. 1991, repealed sec. 9, Ch. 477, L. 1987, which terminated 50-5-301, 50-5-302, 50-5-304 through 50-5-309, and sec. 13, Ch. 329, L. 1983, and amended 50-5-101 and 50-5-106, effective July 1, 1989.

(3) Section 1, Ch. 184, L. 1991, repealed sec. 13, Ch. 329, L. 1983, which terminated 50-5-301, 50-5-302, and 50-5-304 through 50-5-309, and amended 50-5-101 and 50-5-106, effective July 1, 1987.

(4) Section 1, Ch. 184, L. 1991, became effective July 1, 1991.

Repeal Date Amended: Section 3, Ch. 377, L. 1989, amended the July 1, 1989, repeal date enacted in sec. 9, Ch. 477, L. 1987, to provide that this section is repealed July 1, 1991.

1987 Amendment: In (1)(a) substituted "letters" for "notices"; at end of (1)(b) deleted "of similar proposals"; substituted (1)(c)(iv) that reads: "would add a health service that is subject to a certificate of need review under 50-5-301(1)(c)" for former language that read: "(iv) has been approved by the legislature pursuant to the long-range building program under Title 17, chapter 5, part 4, and Title 18, chapter 2, part 1, providing the legislative findings accompanying such approval give consideration to the criteria of 50-5-304, and subject to the provisions of 50-5-309"; at end of (1)(e), after "beds", substituted remainder of subsection for "establishment of new services, and replacement of health care facilities"; inserted (1)(f) that reads: "the circumstances under which a certificate of need may be approved for the use of hospital beds to provide skilled nursing care, intermediate nursing care, or intermediate developmental disability care to patients or residents needing only that level of care"; in (2), after "person", inserted "or persons", before "an existing health care facility" inserted "50% or more of", and after "department" substituted "a letter noting" for "and the appropriate health systems agency a notice of his"; at end of (3) deleted "The letter of intent must be placed in the appropriate batch, if any. Any person who applies for comparative review by submitting a challenge letter of intent during the challenge period immediately following the batch must submit an application within 30 days after the close of the challenge period"; inserted (4) through (6) that reads: "(4) If the proposal is for new beds or major medical equipment, the department shall place the letter of intent in the appropriate batch unless, in the case of beds, the proposal is determined to be exempt from review.

(5) Any person who desires comparative review with a proposal in a batch must submit a challenge letter of intent at least by the end of the challenge period following the batching period for that batch.

(6) The department shall give to each person submitting a letter of intent written notice of the deadline for submission of an application for certificate of need, which will be no less than 30 days after the notice is sent"; near beginning of (7) increased time to "20 working days" from "15 calendar days", in first sentence, after "complete", substituted "and if" for "If, after the 15 days", after "shall" substituted "send a written request to the applicant for" for "request", at end of first sentence deleted "within 5 working days", in second sentence inserted "working" before "days", at end of second sentence inserted "and to send a notice to the applicant that the application is complete or incomplete", and substituted last sentence that reads: "The request for added information may be repeated as long as the information submitted remains incomplete, and the department shall have 15 working days after each submission to send a notice that the application is complete or incomplete" for "If the department fails to make a determination as to the completeness of the application within the prescribed 15-day period, the application shall be deemed to be complete. If the applicant fails to submit the necessary additional information requested by the department by the deadline as prescribed by department rules for considering such reviews, a new letter of intent and application must be submitted and the application will be dropped from the current batch"; inserted (8) and (9) that reads: "(8) If a proposal is to undergo comparative review with another proposal but the applicant fails to submit the necessary additional information requested by the department by the deadline prescribed by department rules, the application must be dropped from the current batch and assigned to the next batching period.

(9) If the department fails to send the notices within the periods prescribed in subsection (7), the application is considered to be complete on the last day of the time period during which the notice should have been sent"; in first sentence of (10), before "notification", inserted "immediate", in second sentence increased time to "90 calendar days" from "60 calendar days", after "is sent" deleted "unless a hearing is required, in which case the review must be completed within 120 days after the notice is sent", changed reference to subsection (3) to reference to subsection (5), near end of second sentence reduced time to "90 days" from "120 days", and at end deleted "All completed applications pertaining to similar types of services, facilities, or equipment affecting the same health service area may be considered in relation to each other. During the review period a public hearing may be held if requested by an affected person or when considered appropriate by the department. Such a hearing must be conducted pursuant to the provisions for informal proceedings of the Montana Administrative Procedure Act"; inserted (11) and (12) that reads: "(11) During the review period a public hearing may be held if requested by an affected person or when considered appropriate by the department.

(12) Each completed application may be considered in relation to other applications pertaining to similar types of facilities or equipment affecting the same health service area"; and made minor changes in phraseology.

1987 Statement of Intent: The statement of intent attached to Ch. 477, L. 1987, provided: "A statement of intent is prepared for this bill because the committee [House Health and Human Services Committee] felt it was necessary to ensure compliance with legislative intent in furtherance of the extension of rulemaking authority provided in section 11.

The legislature contemplates that the department of health and environmental sciences [now department of public health and human sciences] will continue to monitor the effects of certificate of need and other factors that control capital expenditures and development of health care service capacity. By December 1, 1988, the department must provide for the 1989 legislature an evaluation of the need to continue the certificate of need program beyond June 30, 1989, and identify any alternative legislation that would be needed if certificate of need were to be discontinued. It is also this committee's intent that the legislative audit committee review and, if possible, make a performance audit of the certificate of need process and make its recommendation to the 1989 legislature."

1985 Amendments: Chapter 26 in (3) substituted last sentence requiring submission of an application within 30 days after the challenge period for "After expiration of the challenge period following the batching period in which the letter of intent was submitted or if no batching is required, after receipt of the letter of intent, the department shall send the person an application form requiring the submission of information considered necessary by the department to determine if the proposed activity meets the standards in 50-5-304"; in third sentence of (4) substituted "applicant" for "application"; in first sentence of (5) substituted "After an application is designated complete" for "After all applications in the current batch have been designated complete or, if an application does not require batching, after it is designated complete"; in second sentence of (5) substituted "The review period for an application may be no longer than 60 calendar days after the notice is sent unless a hearing is required, in which case the review must be completed within 120 days after the notice is sent or, if a challenging application has been submitted as provided in subsection (3), within 120 days after the notice has been sent for all such challenging applications" for "The review period for an application may be no longer than 90 calendar days after the notice is sent unless a longer period is agreed to by the applicant or, if the application has been batched, by all applicants in the batch"; inserted third sentence of (5) allowing a longer period upon consent; inserted last sentence of (5) requiring that hearings be conducted according to the Montana Administrative Procedure Act; and made minor changes in phraseology.

Chapter 140 at end of (1)(c)(iv) substituted "50-5-309" for "[section 9]"; and in (4) near middle of third sentence substituted "applicant" for "application".

1983 Amendment: Substituted entire text (see 1983 Session Law) for former text, which read: "(1) Any person intending to initiate an activity for which a certificate of need is required shall submit a letter of intent to the department. After receipt, the department shall send the applicant a form requiring the submission of information considered necessary by the department to determine if the proposed activity meets the standards in 50-5-304. The form and content of the notification of intent and applications for certificates of need shall be prescribed by rule by the department.

(2) Within 15 calendar days after receipt of the application, the department shall determine whether it contains sufficient information to determine if the proposed activity meets the standards in 50-5-304. If the application is found incomplete, the department shall request additional information.

(3) After the application has been designated complete, notification must be sent to the applicant and all other affected persons regarding the department's projected review of the application and the review period time schedule. The review period for the application may be no longer than 90 calendar days after the notice is sent unless a longer period is agreed to by the applicant. During the review period a public hearing may be held if requested by one or more affected persons.

(4) The department shall, after considering all comments received during the review period, issue a certificate of need, with or without conditions, or reject the application. The department shall notify the applicant and affected persons of its decision."

1997 Amendment: Chapter 93 in (1)(b) and (1)(c) substituted "state health care facilities plan" for "state health plan"; in (7), after "health", deleted "manpower"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective March 19, 1997.

1995 Amendment: Chapter 398 inserted (1)(a) relating to a demonstration that the service is needed; inserted (1)(b) relating to data demonstrating the need for services contrary to the current state health plan; inserted (11) relating to a project to add long-term care facility beds, with criteria as to the need for the beds, the current and projected population over 65 years of age, and other appropriate factors; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective April 12, 1995.

Termination Provisions Repealed — Effective Date: (1) Section 1, Ch. 184, L. 1991, repealed sec. 3, Ch. 377, L. 1989, which terminated 50-5-301, 50-5-302, 50-5-304 through 50-5-310, and sec. 13, Ch. 329, L. 1983, and amended 50-5-101 and 50-5-106, effective July 1, 1991.

(2) Section 1, Ch. 184, L. 1991, repealed sec. 9, Ch. 477, L. 1987, which terminated 50-5-301, 50-5-302, 50-5-304 through 50-5-309, and sec. 13, Ch. 329, L. 1983, and amended 50-5-101 and 50-5-106, effective July 1, 1989.

(3) Section 1, Ch. 184, L. 1991, repealed sec. 13, Ch. 329, L. 1983, which terminated 50-5-301, 50-5-302, and 50-5-304 through 50-5-309, and amended 50-5-101 and 50-5-106, effective July 1, 1987.

(4) Section 1, Ch. 184, L. 1991, became effective July 1, 1991.

Repeal Date Amended: Section 3, Ch. 377, L. 1989, amended the July 1, 1989, repeal date enacted in sec. 9, Ch. 477, L. 1987, to provide that this section is repealed July 1, 1991.

1987 Amendment: Substituted (1) that reads: "the degree to which the proposal being reviewed is consistent with the current state health plan" for "(a) the relationship of the health services being reviewed to the applicable health systems plan, state health plan, and annual implementation plan developed pursuant to Title XV of the Public Health Service Act, as amended;

(b) the relationship of services reviewed to the long-range development plan, if any, of the person providing or proposing the services"; in (2) substituted "proposal" for "services"; deleted former (1)(i), (1)(j), and (1)(k) that read: "(i) the special needs and circumstances of those entities which provide a substantial portion of their services or resources, or both, to individuals not residing in the health service areas in which the entities are located or in adjacent health service areas. Such entities may include medical and other health profession schools, multidisciplinary clinics, and specialty centers.

(j) the special needs and circumstances of health maintenance organizations for which assistance may be provided under Title XIII of the Public Health Service Act. Such needs and circumstances include the needs of and costs to members and projected members of the health maintenance organization in obtaining health services and the potential for a reduction in the use of inpatient care in the community through an extension of preventive health services and the provision of more systematic and comprehensive health services.

(k) the special needs and circumstances of biomedical and behavioral research projects which are designed to meet a national need and for which local conditions offer special advantages"; deleted former (1)(n) and (2) that read: "(n) any other criteria, required findings, or requirements for reviewing certificate of need applications cited in the federal regulations found in Title 42, CFR, Part 123, as amended.

(2) If an application for new long-term care beds will involve new or increased use of medicaid funds and the department of social and rehabilitation services determines that such use would cause the state medicaid budget for long-term care facilities to be exceeded, the department of health and environmental sciences may impose conditions on a certificate of need for new long-term care beds, including limitation on the number of approved beds which may be certified for medicaid patients. Availability of medicaid funding may be the basis for imposing conditions but may not be the sole basis for denial of a certificate of need. The department may adopt rules for the imposition of such conditions, but only if the secretary of the United States department of health and human services has approved an amendment to the state's medicaid plan, adopted pursuant to 42 U.S.C. 1396a, allowing for the imposition of such conditions"; and made minor changes in phraseology.

1987 Statement of Intent: The statement of intent attached to Ch. 477, L. 1987, provided: "A statement of intent is prepared for this bill because the committee [House Health and Human Services Committee] felt it was necessary to ensure compliance with legislative intent in furtherance of the extension of rulemaking authority provided in section 11.

The legislature contemplates that the department of health and environmental sciences [now department of public health and human services] will continue to monitor the effects of certificate of need and other factors that control capital expenditures and development of health care service capacity. By December 1, 1988, the department must provide for the 1989 legislature an evaluation of the need to continue the certificate of need program beyond June 30, 1989, and identify any alternative legislation that would be needed if certificate of need were to be discontinued. It is also this committee's intent that the legislative audit committee review and, if possible, make a performance audit of the certificate of need process and make its recommendation to the 1989 legislature."

Severability: Section 13, Ch. 477, L. 1987, was a severability section.

1983 Amendment: In (1)(a), after "health systems plan" inserted "state health plan"; at end of (1)(f) inserted "and the consistency of the proposal with joint planning efforts by health care providers in the area"; inserted (2) regarding the effect of the availability of Medicaid funding on approval of a certificate of need.

Case Notes

Certificate of Need — Duplication of Services as Test: Community care facility was unsuccessful on appeal in which it claimed it was error to find that establishment of a similar facility would not have an adverse financial impact on existing care systems and was not inconsistent with joint planning efforts by health care providers in the area. Appellant claimed the Board, in granting a certificate of need for a new facility, failed to consider that the new one would be duplicating services offered by appellant. However, Montana's statutory plan allows for duplication where it is considered appropriate, and there was substantial testimony that competition would reduce the cost of care in the area with no adverse effect on care given patients and that quality of care would increase. West-Mont Community Care, Inc. v. Bd. of Health & Environmental Sciences, 217 M 178, 703 P2d 850, 42 St. Rep. 1116 (1985).

Retroactive Application of Rule to Certificate of Need Determination: Generally, an appellate court must apply the law in effect at the time it renders its decision. If, subsequent to a judgment below and before the decision of the appellate court, a law, whether constitutional, statutory, administrative, or judicial, intervenes and positively changes the rule that governs the case, the new law must be obeyed. Retroactive application of new law is impermissible only if it takes away or impairs vested rights acquired under existing law or creates new obligations or imposes new duties in respect to transactions already past. Here, a board considering whether to issue a certificate of need considered the effect of competition, believing it was required to do so under a statute allegedly incorporating federal law. The parties offered evidence on the competition issue, and the losing party argued on appeal that the federal law was not in fact incorporated. After the appeal and before the decision, the board adopted the federal requirement by rule. The Supreme Court held that it must consider the rule, which required the effect of competition to be considered. The administrative rule properly incorporated the federal regulations where it stated that criteria listed in 42 CFR 123.412 will be considered in making a decision. West-Mont Community Care, Inc. v. Bd. of Health & Environmental Sciences, 217 M 178, 703 P2d 850, 42 St. Rep. 1116 (1985).

1985 Amendment: Substituted (2) providing for public hearing to reconsider for former (2), (3), and (4) that read: "(2) An affected person may appeal the department's final decision to the board by filing a written notice of appeal stating the specific findings of fact and conclusions of law being appealed and the grounds. An affected person does not have to request the department to hold a reconsideration hearing prior to filing an administrative appeal to the board. The notice of appeal must be received by the board within 30 calendar days after formal notice of the department's final decision was issued. The board shall give public notice of the appeal within 10 days, and the hearing shall be held within 30 days after receipt of the notice of appeal.

(3) The hearing before the board must be a hearing de novo with respect to the findings and conclusions identified pursuant to subsection (2) and must be conducted pursuant to the contested case provisions of the Montana Administrative Procedure Act. Within 45 calendar days after the conclusion of the public hearing, the board shall make and issue its decision, supported by written findings of fact and conclusions of law. The board may affirm, reverse, or modify the department's decision or remand it for further proceedings.

(4) The final decision of the board shall be considered the decision of the department for purposes of an appeal to district court. Any affected person may appeal this decision to the district court as provided in Title 2, chapter 4, part 7."

1983 Amendment: Substituted entire text (see 1983 Session Law) for former text, which read: "(1) The applicant or a health systems agency designated pursuant to Title XV of the Public Health Service Act may request and shall be granted a public hearing before the department to reconsider its decision, if the request is received by the department within 30 calendar days after the decision is announced. Any other affected person may, for good cause, request the department to reconsider its decision at such a hearing. The department shall grant the request if the affected person submits the request in writing showing good cause as defined in rules adopted by the department and if the request is received by the department within 30 calendar days after the decision is announced. The public hearing to reconsider shall be held, if warranted or required, within 30 calendar days after its request. The department shall make its final decision and written findings of fact and conclusions of law in support thereof within 45 days after the conclusion of the reconsideration hearing. The hearing shall be conducted in accordance with 2-4-601 through 2-4-623.

(2) An aggrieved applicant or a health systems agency designated pursuant to Title XV of the Public Health Service Act may appeal the department's final decision to the board by filing a written notice of appeal stating the specific findings of fact and conclusions of law being appealed and the grounds. The notice of appeal must be received by the board within 30 calendar days after formal notice of the department's final decision was issued. The board shall give public notice of the appeal within 10 days, and the hearing shall be held within 30 days after receipt of the notice of appeal.

(3) The scope of the hearing before the board is limited to a review of the record upon which the department made its decision. The board, upon request of any party to an appeal before the board, shall hear oral arguments and receive written briefs. Within 45 calendar days after the conclusion of the public hearing, the board shall make and issue its decision, supported by written findings of fact and conclusions of law. The board may affirm the department's decision or remand it for further proceedings. The board may reverse or modify the department's decision if the appellant's rights have been prejudiced for any of the reasons found in 2-4-704."

1987 Amendment: Deleted former (1)(a) that read: "(1) Except as provided in subsection (2), the following are exempt from certificate of need review:

(a) expenditures by a health care facility for nonmedical and nonclinical facilities and services unrelated to the operation of the health care facility if a letter of intent is submitted pursuant to 50-5-302 at least 30 days prior to incurring an obligation for capital expenditures to enable the department to determine whether the expenditures are exempt"; at end of section inserted "is exempt from certificate of need review"; and deleted former (2) that read: "(2) If the secretary of the United States department of health and human services notifies the state that the sanctions provided by section 1521 of the Public Health Service Act and all acts amendatory thereto or any other federal statute for noncompliance with federal certificate of need requirements are to be imposed, the department may by rule require certificate of need review for projects exempted by subsection (1) that are otherwise subject to the provisions of this part. Any rule adopted by the department under this subsection is effective only until the 10th day of the next regular legislative session following the adoption of the rule."

1987 Statement of Intent: The statement of intent attached to Ch. 477, L. 1987, provided: "A statement of intent is prepared for this bill because the committee [House Health and Human Services Committee] felt it was necessary to ensure compliance with legislative intent in furtherance of the extension of rulemaking authority provided in section 11.

The legislature contemplates that the department of health and environmental sciences [now department of public health and human services] will continue to monitor the effects of certificate of need and other factors that control capital expenditures and development of health care service capacity. By December 1, 1988, the department must provide for the 1989 legislature an evaluation of the need to continue the certificate of need program beyond June 30, 1989, and identify any alternative legislation that would be needed if certificate of need were to be discontinued. It is also this committee's intent that the legislative audit committee review and, if possible, make a performance audit of the certificate of need process and make its recommendation to the 1989 legislature."

Case Notes

Sterilization — Doctor Subject to Hospital Morality Rules: With respect to the issue of voluntary sterilization, although the physician has exclusive direction over his patient, he is subject to hospital rules based upon religious or moral tenets. Ham v. Holy Rosary Hosp., 165 M 369, 529 P2d 361 (1974).

50-5-503. Refusal by individual to participate in sterilization.

Compiler's Comments

1987 Amendments: Chapters 370 and 450 at end of (3) deleted reference to subsection (20) of 50-5-101.

Case Notes

Untimely Notice: It is an open question whether untimely notice of refusal to participate in a sterilization proceeding might outweigh the right to refuse. Twenty-two hours' notice, although a final decision was delayed until approximately 13 hours before the scheduled operation at the hospital administrator's request, was not held untimely. Swanson v. St. John's Lutheran Hosp., 182 M 414, 597 P2d 702 (1979).

Refusal Not Precluded by Past Participation: Past participation in sterilization procedures does not prohibit exercise of the right of refusal based on religious beliefs or moral convictions at any time, if exercised prospectively. Swanson v. St. John's Lutheran Hosp., 182 M 414, 597 P2d 702 (1979).

Statement of Reasons: The reasons for refusal to participate in sterilization procedures need not be stated at the time of refusal unless requested by the hospital at that time. The conscience of the person need not be related to any particular religion, cult, or sect but may be a part of the person's indefinable concept of the natural law, not easily definable in an A-B-C fashion. Swanson v. St. John's Lutheran Hosp., 182 M 414, 597 P2d 702 (1979).

50-5-504. Unlawful to interfere with right of refusal.

Case Notes

Evidence to Support Award of Exemplary Damages and Damages for Mental Distress: Plaintiff's employment as a nurse-anesthetist was terminated by defendant hospital for plaintiff's refusal to participate in a tubal ligation. In an action for damages, the plaintiff introduced no evidence supporting her claims for exemplary damages and damages for mental distress. No award for the claimed damages was made as neither the likelihood of the hospital's improper behavior nor the plaintiff's injuries were so great as to justify awarding damages without proof. Swanson v. St. John's Lutheran Hosp., 189 M 259, 615 P2d 883, 37 St. Rep. 1420 (1980).

Future Damages: Plaintiff's employment as a nurse-anesthetist was terminated by defendant hospital for plaintiff's refusal to participate in a tubal ligation. In an action for damages, the plaintiff introduced evidence of her projected future earnings. The District Court failed to award future damages and gave no reasons for its decision. It must be assumed that the District Court was aware of its power to award future damages under 27-1-203 but did not feel such damages were reasonably certain to occur. Swanson v. St. John's Lutheran Hosp., 189 M 259, 615 P2d 883, 37 St. Rep. 1420 (1980).

Theory for Determining Damages: This section creates a statutory right to receive damages above and beyond the employment contract. A compensation theory is to be used with future damages, exemplary damages, and damages for mental distress allowable in the proper case. Swanson v. St. John's Lutheran Hosp., 189 M 259, 615 P2d 883, 37 St. Rep. 1420 (1980).

Burden of Producing Evidence: Once a discharged hospital employee had established that her discharge was brought about in substantial part by her refusal to participate in a sterilization, it then became the burden of the hospital to prove by a preponderance of the evidence that it would have discharged the employee even if she had not exercised her right of refusal. Swanson v. St. John's Lutheran Hosp., 182 M 414, 597 P2d 702 (1979).

Rights of Employees Preeminent: The "rights" of the hospital to avoid the difficulties of finding substitutes for employees who refuse to participate in a sterilization do not outweigh the rights of employees to refuse to participate. Swanson v. St. John's Lutheran Hosp., 182 M 414, 597 P2d 702 (1979).

Case Notes

Unpaid Emergency Medical Technician Trainees, Volunteers, and Students Not Considered Employees: The definition of emergency medical services personnel in this section does not include an unpaid emergency medical technician (EMT) trainee. Therefore, an unpaid EMT trainee who has not been certified to provide medical services is not considered an employee, as defined in 39-71-118, for workers' compensation purposes. Further, because volunteers are generally not considered employees unless designated by law, a volunteer involved in ambulance services is also not considered an employee, as defined in 39-71-118, for workers' compensation purposes. Similarly, an unpaid student, such as an unpaid EMT trainee, who is learning skills in a work environment is considered a volunteer and is not considered an employee, as defined in 39-71-118, for workers' compensation purposes. The general statement of public policy in Great W. Sugar Co. v. District Court, 188 M 1, 610 P2d 717 (1980), that all forms of employment are subject to the Workers' Compensation Act, does not apply to unpaid EMT trainees and volunteers because those persons are not considered employees. It is the intent of the legislature that the board define several certification levels for emergency medical technicians, which will differ in the amount of training required and in the acts allowed to be performed. It is also intended that the board specify the training needed by each level, the acts and procedures each level is allowed to perform, the standards that must be met to be certified and recertified at each level, and procedural requirements necessary to enforce and implement certification and training."

Ambulance Service Licensing

Part Compiler's Comments

1989 Statement of Intent: The statement of intent attached to Ch. 387, L. 1989, provided: "A statement of intent is required for this bill because [section 3] [50-6-323] grants authority to the department of health and environmental sciences [now department of public health and human services] to adopt rules necessary to carry out the provisions of Title 50, chapter 6, part 3.

In adopting rules, the department should consider the following:

(1) It is the intent of the legislature that the department adopt rules to regulate emergency medical services. These rules may include minimum licensing standards for various types and levels of prehospital and interhospital emergency medical services. The rules may also include other requirements to assure the quality, safety, and proper operation of emergency medical services in Montana.

(2) In addition to rules governing operation of ground ambulance services, which are currently regulated, it is intended that the department adopt rules to regulate other types of emergency medical transportation and treatment services not currently subject to regulation by the department. Examples of such services include air ambulance services, such as fixed-wing aircraft which provide life support services, including medical personnel and medical equipment; initial response rotary-wing aircraft; and nontransporting medical units. The department shall exclude from regulation air transportation services, such as charter or fixed-based operators, regulated by the federal aviation administration that offer no special medical services or provide only transportation to patients or persons at the direction or under the supervision of an independent physician.

(3) It is further intended that the department adopt rules to regulate various levels of emergency services that have evolved in recent years (such as basic life support, defibrillation, and advanced life support) without minimum standards, rules, or licensing to assure the health and safety of the public. Rules to regulate these various levels of service should recognize the differences in personnel, equipment, and operational requirements for each type and level of service.

(4) The department should assure minimum statewide standards for prehospital emergency medical care; however, the rules should not be so stringent that the provision of emergency medical care in smaller communities will be made unreasonably difficult or expensive. If a licensed emergency medical service is not reasonably available, department rules should not preclude the occasional and infrequent transportation of patients by other means available. Nevertheless, rules should not conflict with any regulations issued by a federal agency, such as the federal aviation administration.

(5) The legislature intends that the department establish an advisory committee to make recommendations to the department or to the board of health and environmental sciences [now board of environmental review] concerning matters described in [section 12] [50-6-324]. Creation of this committee and its composition should be established by rule. Any such rule adopted by the department should assure that persons actively providing emergency medical care be included as members of the committee."

1989 Amendment: At beginning inserted "legislature finds and declares that: (1) the"; in (1) substituted "emergency medical services" for "ambulance services" and after "services" deleted "as defined in 50-6-302"; in (2) substituted "providing emergency medical services is necessary" for "engaged therein in order"; in (3) substituted "emergency medical care services" for "establishments providing such service"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective January 1, 1990.

50-6-302. Definitions.

Compiler's Comments

2009 Amendments — Composite Section: Chapter 150 inserted definition of board; in definition of emergency medical service substituted "interfacility" for "interhospital" and at end of sentence following "unit" inserted "that is licensed by the department"; deleted definition of medical control that read: ""Medical control" means the function of a licensed physician in providing direction, advice, or orders to an emergency medical service provider"; inserted definitions of offline medical direction and online medical direction and deleted definition of offline medical director that read: ""Offline medical director" means a physician who is responsible and accountable for the overall medical direction and medical supervision of an emergency medical service and who is responsible for the proper application of patient care techniques and the quality of care provided by the emergency medical services personnel. The term includes only a physician who volunteers the physician's services as an offline medical director or whose total reimbursement for those services in any 12-month period does not exceed $5,000"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective October 1, 2009.

Chapter 354 inserted definitions of nonemergency ambulance transport and volunteer emergency medical technician; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective April 24, 2009.

1995 Amendments — Composite Section: Chapter 418 in definition of Board substituted "board of public health" for "board of health and environmental sciences"; in definition of Department substituted "department of public health" for "department of health and environmental sciences"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective July 1, 1995.

Chapter 546 deleted definition of Board that read: ""Board" means the board of health and environmental sciences, provided for in 2-15-2104"; in definition of Department substituted "department of public health and human services provided for in 2-15-2201" for "department of health and environmental sciences, provided for in Title 2, chapter 15, part 21"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective July 1, 1995.

Style changes in the chapters were slightly different. In each case, the codifier chose the most appropriate.

Transition: Section 499, Ch. 418, L. 1995, provided: "The provisions of 2-15-131 through 2-15-137 apply to [this act]."

Saving Clause: Section 503, Ch. 418, L. 1995, was a saving clause.

1991 Amendment: Inserted definition of off-line medical director. Amendment effective April 1, 1991.

1989 Amendment: Inserted definitions of aircraft, emergency medical service, medical control, and nontransporting medical unit; in definition of ambulance, after "vehicle", inserted "or aircraft", after "that" deleted "is especially designed, constructed, and equipped which", after "patients" deleted language concerning dual purpose vehicles, at beginning of second sentence inserted "The term", after "vehicle" inserted "or aircraft", after "States" deleted "or this state", and inserted third sentence excluding from definition certain operators regulated by federal government; deleted former definitions of ambulance service, attendant, attendant driver, driver, and dual purpose police patrol car; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective January 1, 1990.

Case Notes

Unpaid Emergency Medical Technician Trainees, Volunteers, and Students Not Considered Employees: The definition of emergency medical services personnel in 50-6-202 does not include an unpaid emergency medical technician (EMT) trainee. Therefore, an unpaid EMT trainee who has not been certified to provide medical services is not considered an employee, as defined in 39-71-118, for workers' compensation purposes. Further, because volunteers are generally not considered employees unless designated by law, a volunteer involved in ambulance services is also not considered an employee, as defined in 39-71-118, for workers' compensation purposes. Similarly, an unpaid student, such as an unpaid EMT trainee, who is learning skills in a work environment is considered a volunteer and is not considered an employee, as defined in 39-71-118, for workers' compensation purposes. The general statement of public policy in Great W. Sugar Co. v. District Court, 188 M 1, 610 P2d 717 (1980), that all forms of employment are subject to the Workers' Compensation Act, does not apply to unpaid EMT trainees and volunteers because those persons are not considered employees. Dyess v. Meagher County, 2003 MT 78, 315 M 35, 67 P3d 281 (2003).

State Trauma Care System

Part Compiler's Comments

Preamble: The preamble attached to Ch. 579, L. 1995, provided: "WHEREAS, the Legislature recognizes that trauma is the leading cause of death and disability for Montanans under 44 years of age and causes the loss of more years of human life than all other causes of death combined; and

WHEREAS, the death rate from injury in Montana is higher than the national norm, resulting in an economic loss to the state because of the productive years of life lost and the cost of treatment and rehabilitation; and

WHEREAS, organized systems of trauma care have been shown to reduce the number of deaths and disabilities resulting from trauma; and

WHEREAS, the people of the State of Montana would benefit from establishment and coordination of a statewide trauma care system."

1995 Statement of Intent: The statement of intent attached to Ch. 579, L. 1995, provided: "A statement of intent is required for this bill because [section 4(2)] [56-4-402(2)] requires the department of health and environmental sciences [now department of public health and human services] to adopt rules to implement a statewide trauma care system. It is the intent of the legislature that the rules adopted by the department:

(1) determine trauma regions by existing patient flow patterns;

(2) specify procedures that ensure due process in the designation and revocation of designation of trauma facilities;

(3) adopt protocols that will be used to screen and classify trauma patients to ensure that they are sent to the most appropriate treatment facilities and receive the most appropriate treatment;

(4) adopt standards for the state and hospital trauma registers in order to ensure that data on trauma cases is collected and organized in a manner allowing analysis of the quality of trauma care and the improvement of that care; and

(5) establish four levels of trauma care facilities, each having a different capacity for trauma treatment:

(a) regional centers capable of providing advanced trauma care to a region;

(b) area trauma hospitals capable of handling most trauma patients within their ordinary service areas;

(c) community trauma hospitals with limited emergency and surgical coverage; and

(d) trauma receiving facilities, such as hospitals with no surgical coverage and medical assistance facilities."

Automated External Defibrillator Programs

Part Compiler's Comments

Preamble: The preamble attached to Ch. 335, L. 1999, provided: "WHEREAS, the Montana Legislature finds that each year more than 250,000 Americans die from out-of-hospital, sudden cardiac arrest; and

WHEREAS, the American Heart Association estimates that more than 20,000 deaths could be prevented each year if early defibrillation were more widely available; and

WHEREAS, while many communities have invested in 9-1-1 emergency notification systems and emergency medical services systems that include well-trained emergency personnel, in other communities there are insufficient numbers of strategically placed defibrillators and persons properly trained to operate them.

THEREFORE, the Legislature finds that in order to improve the access of Montana's citizens to early defibrillation, the Legislature should authorize and regulate the establishment of early defibrillation programs by many different public and private entities in careful coordination with emergency medical services systems."

RIGHTS OF THE TERMINALLY ILL ACT

Chapter Commissioner's Comments

The Rights of the Terminally Ill Act is designed to provide various means by which an individual's preferences can be carried out with regard to administration of life-sustaining treatment. The Act permits an individual to execute a declaration that instructs a physician to withhold or withdraw life-sustaining treatment in the event the individual is in a terminal condition and is unable to participate in medical treatment decisions. In the alternative, the Act permits the individual to execute a declaration designating another individual to make decisions regarding the withholding or withdrawal of life-sustaining treatment. Finally, the Act authorizes an attending physician to withhold or withdraw life-sustaining treatment in the absence of a declaration upon the consent of a close relative if the action would not conflict with the known intentions of the individual.

The scope of the Act is narrow. Its impact is limited to treatment that is merely life-prolonging, and to patients whose terminal condition is incurable and irreversible, whose death will soon occur, and who are unable to participate in treatment decisions. Beyond its narrow scope, the Act is not intended to affect any existing rights and responsibilities of persons to make medical treatment decisions. The Act merely provides alternative ways in which a terminally-ill patient's desires regarding the use of life-sustaining procedures can be legally implemented.

The purposes of the Act are (1) to establish a procedure which is simple, effective, and acceptable to persons who desire to execute a declaration, (2) to provide a statutory framework that is acceptable to physicians and health-care facilities whose conduct will be affected, (3) to provide for the effectiveness of a declaration in states other than the state in which it is executed through uniformity of scope and procedure, and (4) to avoid the inconsistency in approach that has characterized early state statutes in the area.

The Act's basic structure and substance has been drawn from existing legislation in order to avoid further complexity and to permit its effective operation in light of prior enactments. Departures from existing statutes have been made, however, in order to simplify procedures, improve drafting, and clarify language. Selected provisions have been reworked to express more adequately a specific concept (i.e., life-sustaining treatment, terminal condition) or to reflect changes in established procedure (i.e., the qualifications of witnesses). The Act's stylistic and substantive departures from existing legislation were pursued for the purposes of clarity and simplicity.

The 1989 Act reflects changes and additions to the original Rights of the Terminally Ill Act, approved by the Conference in 1985. The principal changes are noted in the Comments, but they can also be briefly listed. First, Section 2 [50-9-103] has been expanded to permit individuals to designate other persons to make decisions regarding the withholding or withdrawal of life-sustaining treatment. Second, under new Section 7 [50-9-106] consent to withholding or withdrawal of treatment may be obtained in the absence of a declaration. With few exceptions, changes in the original Act have been limited to Section 2 [50-9-103] and (new) Section 7 [50-9-106], so that states that have enacted the earlier version can easily incorporate the new provisions.

1989 Statement of Intent: The statement of intent attached to Ch. 475, L. 1989, provided: "A statement of intent is needed for this bill because [section 4] [50-9-110] grants the department of health and environmental sciences [now department of public health and human services] authority to adopt rules to implement the Montana Living Will Act. It is intended that the rules address, among other things, living will protocols, reliable documentation of declarations, and training for emergency medical services personnel to inform them of the provisions of the act and implementing rules. In developing the rules, the department should seek the advice and aid of medical associations and organizations, including those relating to hospices, home health organizations, and emergency medical services."

Chapter Case Notes

Physician Aid in Dying Not Against Public Policy — Protection of Participating Physician From Prosecution: The District Court held that a competent terminally ill patient has a right to die with dignity pursuant to the rights to individual dignity and privacy in the Montana Constitution, which includes protection of the patient's physician from prosecution for homicide. The Supreme Court held that the issue could be resolved at the statutory level and therefore declined to rule on the constitutional issue. Because suicide is not a crime under Montana law, the only person who might be subject to criminal prosecution is a physician who prescribes a lethal dose of medication to a terminally ill patient. Thus, the court addressed the possible culpability of a physician who extends aid in dying, whether the patient's consent could constitute a statutory defense against a homicide charge against the assisting physician, and whether patient consent is rendered ineffective by 45-2-211(2)(d) because permitting the conduct or resulting harm is against public policy. The court noted that the consent defense is effective only if none of the exceptions in 45-2-211(2) apply. By law, consent is ineffective if it is (1) given by a person who is legally incompetent to authorize the conduct charged to constitute the offense; (2) given by a person who by reason of youth, mental disease or defect, or intoxication is unable to make a reasonable judgment as to the nature or harmfulness of the conduct charged to constitute the offense; (3) induced by force, duress, or deception; or (4) against public policy to permit the conduct or the resulting harm, even though consented to. The first three exceptions require case-by-case factual determinations, so the court confined its analysis to whether consent to physician aid in dying is against public policy and concluded that physician aid in dying provided to terminally ill, mentally competent adult patients is not against public policy. The exception to consent applies only to conduct that disrupts public peace and physically endangers others, to which the act of a physician handing medicine to a terminally ill patient and the patient's subsequent peaceful and private act of taking the medicine is not comparable. The physician is not directly involved in the final decision or the final act, and the patient's private decision whether to take the medicine does not breach public peace or endanger others, so the patient's consent to physician aid in dying constitutes a statutory defense to a homicide charge against the physician when no other exceptions apply. Baxter v. St., 2009 MT 449, 354 M 234, 224 P3d 1211 (2009).

Rights of the Terminally Ill Act Not Against Public Policy: The Montana Rights of the Terminally Ill Act clearly provides that terminally ill patients are entitled to autonomous end-of-life decisions even if enforcement of those decisions involves direct participation by a physician through withdrawing or withholding treatment. It is not against public policy to honor the patient's wishes when the patient is conscious and able to vocalize and carry out the decision with self-administered medication and no immediate or direct physician assistance. The Act's encompassing immunity for medical professionals reinforces the patient's right to enforce the decisions without fear that those who give effect to the patient's wishes will be prosecuted. There is nothing in the plain language of the law that indicates that the Act is against public policy. Baxter v. St., 2009 MT 449, 354 M 234, 224 P3d 1211 (2009).

50-9-102. Definitions.

Commissioner's Comments

The Act's definitions of "life-sustaining treatment" and "terminal condition" are interdependent and must be read together. This has caused drafting problems in many existing acts, and the Act has been drafted to avoid the problems detected in existing legislation.

Most of the "life-sustaining treatment" and "terminal condition" definitions in existing statutes were considered problematical in that they (1) were tautological, defining "terminal condition" with respect to "life-sustaining treatment" and vice versa, and (2) defined terminal condition as requiring "imminent" death "whether or not" or "regardless of" the application of life-sustaining treatment. Strictly speaking, if death is "imminent" even with the full application of life-sustaining treatment, there is little point in having a statute permitting withdrawal of such procedures. The Act's definitions have attempted to avoid these problems.

The "life-sustaining treatment" definition found in many statutes inserts the clause "and when, in the judgment of the attending physician, death will occur whether or not such procedure or intervention is utilized," after the phrase "will serve only to prolong the dying process" found in the Act's provision. Because the Act's life-sustaining treatment definition concerns only those procedures or interventions applied to "qualified patients" (i.e., those who have been determined to be in a terminal condition), and because a terminal condition is defined as "incurable and irreversible" with death resulting "in a relatively short time," the requirement that death be "inevitable" has been satisfied by the presence of "qualified patient" in the life-sustaining treatment definition. Therefore, this additional clause was excluded because it was considered repetitious and possibly confusing.

The Act defines "life-sustaining treatment" in an all-inclusive manner, dealing with those procedures necessary for comfort care or alleviation of pain separately in Section 6(b) [50-9-202(2)], where it is provided that such procedures need not be withdrawn or withheld pursuant to a declaration. Most existing statutes incorporate "comfort care" as an exclusion from the definition of life-sustaining treatment. Because many such procedures are life-sustaining, however, the Act avoids definitional confusion by treating them in a separate provision that reflects the Act's policy more clearly, and better reflects the fact that comfort care does not involve a fixed group of procedures applicable in all instances.

Subsection (9) of Section 1 [50-9-102] is the "terminal condition" definition. The difficulty of trying to express such a condition in precise, accurate, but not unduly restricting language is obvious. A definition must preserve the physicians' professional discretion in making such determinations. Consequently, the Act's definition of terminal condition incorporates not only selected language from various state acts, but also suggestions from medical literature in the field.

The Act employs the term "terminal condition" rather than terminal illness, and it is important that these two different concepts be distinguished. Terminal illness, as generally understood, is both broader and narrower than terminal condition. Terminal illness connotes a disease process that will lead to death; "terminal condition" is not limited to disease. "Terminal illness" also connotes an inevitable process leading to death, but does not contain limitations as to the time period prior to death, or potential for nonreversibility, as does "terminal condition."

The terminal condition definition requires that the condition be "incurable and irreversible." These adjectives were chosen over the similar phrase, "no possibility of recovery," because of possible ambiguity in the term "recovery" (i.e., recovery to "normal" or to some other stage). A number of state statutes now use "incurable" and/or "irreversible," and the terms appear to comport with the criteria applied by physicians in terminal care situations. The phrase "incurable and irreversible" is to be read conjunctively as long as the circumstances warrant. A condition which is reversible but incurable is not a terminal condition.

Subsection (9) [50-9-102] also requires that the condition result in the death of the patient with [within] a "relatively short time . . . without the administration of life-sustaining treatment." This requirement differs to some degree from the language employed in most of the statutes. First, the decision that death will occur in a relatively short time is to be made without considering the possibilities of extending life with life-sustaining treatment. The alternative is that required by a number of states—that death be imminent whether or not life-sustaining procedures are applied. The President's Commission for the Study of Ethical Problems in Medicine and Biomedical Research has noted that such a definition severely limits the group of terminally-ill patients able to qualify under these acts. It is precisely because life can be prolonged indefinitely by new medical technology that these acts have come into existence. Though the Act intends to err on the side of prolonging life, it should not be made wholly ineffective as to the actual situation it purports to address. The provisions which require that death be imminent regardless of the application of life-sustaining procedures appear to have that effect. Therefore, such provisions have been excluded in the Act.

The terminal condition definition of Subsection (9) [50-9-102] requires that death result "in a relatively short time." Rejecting the "imminency" language employed in a number of statutes, this alternative was chosen because it provides needed flexibility and reflects the balancing character of the time frame judgment. Though the phrase, "relatively short time," does not eliminate the need for judgment, it focuses the physician's medical judgment and avoids the narrowing implications of the word "imminent."

The "relatively short time" formulation is employed to avoid both the unduly constricting meaning of "imminent" and the artificiality of another alternative—fixed time periods, such as 6 months, 1 year, or the like. The circumstances and inevitable variations in disorder and diagnosis make unrealistic a fixed time period. Physicians may be hesitant to make predictions under a fixed time period standard unless the standard of physician judgment is so loose as to be unenforceable. Under the Act's standard, considerations such as the strength of the diagnosis, the type of disorder, and the like can be reflected in the judgment that death will result within a relatively short time, as they are now reflected in judgments physicians must and do make.

The life-sustaining treatment and terminal condition definitions exclude certain types of disorders, such as kidney disease requiring dialysis, and diabetes requiring continued use of insulin. This is accomplished in the requirement that terminal conditions be "irreversible," and that life-sustaining procedures serve "only to prolong the dying process." For purposes of the Act, diabetes treatable with insulin is "reversible," a diabetic person so treatable is not in the "dying process," and insulin is a treatment the benefits of which foreclose it serving "only" to prolong the dying process.

50-9-103. Declaration relating to use of life-sustaining treatment — designee.

Commissioner's Comments

Section 2 [50-9-103] sets out the minimal requirements regarding the making and execution of a valid declaration. "Sample" declaration forms are offered in this section. The forms are not mandatory, as some acts require; they "may, but need not, be" followed. The forms provided also are not as elaborate as others. The drafters rejected more detailed declarations for two reasons. First, the forms are to serve only as examples of a valid declaration. More elaborate forms may have erroneously implied that a declaration more simply constructed would not be legally sufficient. Second, the sample forms' simple structure and specific language attempt to provide notice of exactly what is to be effectuated through these documents to those persons desiring to execute a declaration and the physicians who are to honor it.

Sections 2(a) and (c) [50-9-103(1) and (3)] of the Act authorize an individual by a declaration to designate another person to make decisions governing the withholding or withdrawal of life-sustaining care. The designated person must be an adult of sound mine, but no other restrictions are placed on the designation other than the requirements of form contained in Section 2(a) [50-9-103(1)]. The designated person may be an attorney-in-fact who is so designated in the declaration or in another writing that conforms with the applicable requirements of each state for durable powers of attorney.

Section 2(c) [50-9-103(3)] provides a model form of declaration by which the designation of another decision-maker may be accomplished. The bracketed language in the Section 2(c) [50-9-103(3)] form of declaration is intended to allow a declarant two choices when designating another person to make treatment decisions. First, by striking the bracketed language, an individual may make an exclusive designation of another decision-maker, and if that person is not available to fulfill the responsibility, the declaration will have no effect. It is intended, in such an event, that the substituted decision-makers who are authorized to make treatment decisions in Section 7 [50-9-106] will be able to exercise decision-making authority pursuant to the terms of Section 7 [50-9-106]. The execution of a declaration exclusively designating another person to make treatment decisions, in other words, should not itself be construed as an "expressed intention of the individual" not to have life-sustaining treatment withheld or withdrawn under Section 7(d) [50-9-106(4)].

The second choice available in the Section 2(c) [50-9-103(3)] form of declaration would make the declaration directly effective by its terms in the event that the substituted decision-maker were unavailable. This would be accomplished by not striking the bracketed language.

Other than the requirement that designees be adults of sound mind, no limitation is placed in Section 2 [50-9-103] on the person(s) who may be designated to make decisions about the withholding or withdrawal of treatment for the declarant. It is specifically anticipated, for example, that some people may choose to appoint their physician to make such decisions and, absent any ethical restrictions on such an appointment, Section 2 [50-9-103] anticipates that the physician may act in the appointed capacity.

Persons may be appointed to make decisions for a declarant through a declaration in substantially the form contained in Section 2(c) [50-9-103(3)], through appointment of an attorney-in-fact pursuant to a durable power of attorney, or through a judicially appointed guardian. In all cases, the designee has full power to make the relevant decisions called for in the Act, and functions as the agent of the declarant. No specific standards, other than good faith, apply to decisions of the designee. Designation of another to make decisions pursuant to a durable power of attorney or judicially-appointed guardianship is treated as a declaration under the Act, so that, for example, decisions of the designee "govern" treatment decisions by the physician, and a physician who is unwilling to abide by such decisions (if medically reasonable) must transfer the patient to the care of another physician.

Designation by a durable power of attorney or judicially-appointed guardianship must be based on a sufficiently specific reference to health care or terminal care treatment decisions, as required by state law governing such appointments, to trigger application of the Act. No specific formulation of the terms of appointment is required, however. If appointment for purposes of health-care decisions would be sufficient under state law to include withholding or withdrawal of treatment for a person in a terminal condition, that will suffice under the Act.

The Act's authorization for specific decisions does not in any way restrict authority that exists under state law. The Act is in this respect additive only. Thus, for example, if an attorney-in-fact would have the authority independent of this Act to authorize withdrawal of treatment for a person in a persistent vegetative state not covered by the terms of the Act, the Act's limitations would not circumscribe the attorney-in-fact's authority under other law.

In designating another person to make treatment decisions, it is assumed that a declarant will identify only a single decision-maker. In view of this assumption, Sections 2(a) and (c) [50-9-103(1) and (3)] permit designation of an individual, rather than individuals, as the problems associated with identifying, locating, and communicating with multiple decision-makers are substantial and the drafters did not want to encourage the practice.

The Act does not expressly prohibit multiple designees, however, and a declaration containing a multiple designation is not invalid under the Act. The absence of any provision permitting a majority of such designees to act in the case of a disagreement, however, means that the refusal of one member of a designee group to agree to direct the withholding or withdrawal of treatment will foreclose any action under the Act unless the declaration specifically provides otherwise. Because of the difficulties associated with multiple designees under the Act, declarants should be discouraged from the practice and, if such designations are made and any result other than the one stated above is desired, the declaration should so specify.

The Act's provisions governing witnesses to a declaration are simplified. Section 2 [50-9-103] provides only that the declaration be signed by the declarant in the presence of two witnesses. The Act does not require witnesses to meet any specific qualifications for two primary reasons. First, the interest in simplicity mandates as uncomplicated a procedure as possible. It is intended that the Act present a viable alternative for those persons interested in participating in their medical treatment decisions in the event of a terminal condition.

Second, the absence of more elaborate witness requirements relieves physicians of the inappropriate and perhaps impossible burden of determining whether the legalities of the witness requirements have been met. Many physicians understandably and rightly would be hesitant to make such decisions and, therefore, the effectiveness of the declaration might be jeopardized. It should be noted, as well, that protection against abuse in these situations is provided by the criminal penalties in Section 10 [50-9-206]. The attending physicians and other health-care professionals will be able, in most circumstances, to discuss the declaration with the patient and family, and any suspicion of duress or wrongdoing can be discovered and handled by established hospital procedures.

Section 2(e) [50-9-103(5)] requires that a physician or health-care provider who is given a copy of the declaration record it in the declarant's medical records. This step is critical to the effectuation of the declaration, and the duty applies regardless of the time of receipt. If a copy of the same declaration is already in the record, its re-recording would not be necessary, but its receipt should be noted as evidence of its continued force. Section 2(e) [50-9-103(5)] is not duplicative of Section 5 [50-9-201] which requires recording the terms of the declaration (or the document itself, when available, in the event of telephonic communication to the physician by another physician, for example) at the time the physician makes a determination of terminal condition. It was deemed important that knowledge of the declaration and its continued force be specifically noted at this critical juncture.

Section 2(e) [50-9-103(5)] imposes a duty on the physician or other health-care provider to inform the declarant of his or her unwillingness to comply with the provisions of the declaration. This will provide notice to the declarant that certain terms may be deemed medically unreasonable (Section 11(f) [50-9-205(6)]), or that the declarant should decide whether to select another attending physician who is willing to carry out the Act (Section 8 [50-9-203]).

Case Notes

Physician Aid in Dying Not Against Public Policy — Protection of Participating Physician From Prosecution: The District Court held that a competent terminally ill patient has a right to die with dignity pursuant to the rights to individual dignity and privacy in the Montana Constitution, which includes protection of the patient's physician from prosecution for homicide. The Supreme Court held that the issue could be resolved at the statutory level and therefore declined to rule on the constitutional issue. Because suicide is not a crime under Montana law, the only person who might be subject to criminal prosecution is a physician who prescribes a lethal dose of medication to a terminally ill patient. Thus, the court addressed the possible culpability of a physician who extends aid in dying, whether the patient's consent could constitute a statutory defense against a homicide charge against the assisting physician, and whether patient consent is rendered ineffective by 45-2-211(2)(d) because permitting the conduct or resulting harm is against public policy. The court noted that the consent defense is effective only if none of the exceptions in 45-2-211(2) apply. By law, consent is ineffective if it is (1) given by a person who is legally incompetent to authorize the conduct charged to constitute the offense; (2) given by a person who by reason of youth, mental disease or defect, or intoxication is unable to make a reasonable judgment as to the nature or harmfulness of the conduct charged to constitute the offense; (3) induced by force, duress, or deception; or (4) against public policy to permit the conduct or the resulting harm, even though consented to. The first three exceptions require case-by-case factual determinations, so the court confined its analysis to whether consent to physician aid in dying is against public policy and concluded that physician aid in dying provided to terminally ill, mentally competent adult patients is not against public policy. The exception to consent applies only to conduct that disrupts public peace and physically endangers others, to which the act of a physician handing medicine to a terminally ill patient and the patient's subsequent peaceful and private act of taking the medicine is not comparable. The physician is not directly involved in the final decision or the final act, and the patient's private decision whether to take the medicine does not breach public peace or endanger others, so the patient's consent to physician aid in dying constitutes a statutory defense to a homicide charge against the physician when no other exceptions apply. Baxter v. St., 2009 MT 449, 354 M 234, 224 P3d 1211 (2009).

Rights of the Terminally Ill Act Not Against Public Policy: The Montana Rights of the Terminally Ill Act clearly provides that terminally ill patients are entitled to autonomous end-of-life decisions even if enforcement of those decisions involves direct participation by a physician through withdrawing or withholding treatment. It is not against public policy to honor the patient's wishes when the patient is conscious and able to vocalize and carry out the decision with self-administered medication and no immediate or direct physician assistance. The Act's encompassing immunity for medical professionals reinforces the patient's right to enforce the decisions without fear that those who give effect to the patient's wishes will be prosecuted. 50-9-104. Revocation of declaration.

Commissioner's Comments

Section 4 [50-9-104] provides for revocation of a declaration and is modeled after North Carolina's similar provision. Virtually every other statute sets out specific examples of how a declaration can be revoked—by physical destruction, by a signed, dated writing, or by a verbal expression of revocation. A provision that freely allowed revocation and avoided procedural complications was desired. The simple language of Section 4 [50-9-104] appears to meet these qualifications. It should be noted that the revocation is, of course, not effective until communicated to the attending physician or another health-care provider working under a physician's guidance, such as nursing facility or hospice staff. The Act, unlike many statutes, also does not explicitly require that a person relaying the revocation be acting on the declarant's behalf. Such a requirement could impose an unreasonable burden on the attending physician. The communication is assumed to be in good faith, and the physician may rely on it.

In employing a general revocation provision, it was intended to permit revocation by the broadest range of means. Therefore, for example, it is intended that a revocation can be effected in writing, orally, by physical defacement or destruction of a declaration, and by physician [physical] sign communicating intention to revoke.

50-9-105. When declaration operative.

Commissioner's Comments

Section 3 [50-9-105] establishes the preconditions to the declaration becoming operative. Once operative, Section 3, [50-9-105] provides that the attending physician shall act in accordance with the provisions of the declaration or transfer care of the patient under Section 8 [50-9-203]. This provision is not intended to eliminate the physician's need to evaluate particular requests in terms of reasonable medical practice under Section 11(f) [50-9-205(6)], nor to relieve the physician from carrying out the declaration except for any specific unreasonable or unlawful request in the declaration. Transfer of the patient under Section 8 [50-9-203] is to occur if the physician, for reasons of conscience, for example, is unwilling to carry out the Act or to follow medically reasonable requests in the declaration.

Case Notes

Physician Aid in Dying Not Against Public Policy — Protection of Participating Physician From Prosecution: The District Court held that a competent terminally ill patient has a right to die with dignity pursuant to the rights to individual dignity and privacy in the Montana Constitution, which includes protection of the patient's physician from prosecution for homicide. The Supreme Court held that the issue could be resolved at the statutory level and therefore declined to rule on the constitutional issue. Because suicide is not a crime under Montana law, the only person who might be subject to criminal prosecution is a physician who prescribes a lethal dose of medication to a terminally ill patient. Thus, the court addressed the possible culpability of a physician who extends aid in dying, whether the patient's consent could constitute a statutory defense against a homicide charge against the assisting physician, and whether patient consent is rendered ineffective by 45-2-211(2)(d) because permitting the conduct or resulting harm is against public policy. The court noted that the consent defense is effective only if none of the exceptions in 45-2-211(2) apply. By law, consent is ineffective if it is (1) given by a person who is legally incompetent to authorize the conduct charged to constitute the offense; (2) given by a person who by reason of youth, mental disease or defect, or intoxication is unable to make a reasonable judgment as to the nature or harmfulness of the conduct charged to constitute the offense; (3) induced by force, duress, or deception; or (4) against public policy to permit the conduct or the resulting harm, even though consented to. The first three exceptions require case-by-case factual determinations, so the court confined its analysis to whether consent to physician aid in dying is against public policy and concluded that physician aid in dying provided to terminally ill, mentally competent adult patients is not against public policy. The exception to consent applies only to conduct that disrupts public peace and physically endangers others, to which the act of a physician handing medicine to a terminally ill patient and the patient's subsequent peaceful and private act of taking the medicine is not comparable. The physician is not directly involved in the final decision or the final act, and the patient's private decision whether to take the medicine does not breach public peace or endanger others, so the patient's consent to physician aid in dying constitutes a statutory defense to a homicide charge against the physician when no other exceptions apply. Baxter v. St., 2009 MT 449, 354 M 234, 224 P3d 1211 (2009).

Rights of the Terminally Ill Act Not Against Public Policy: The Montana Rights of the Terminally Ill Act clearly provides that terminally ill patients are entitled to autonomous end-of-life decisions even if enforcement of those decisions involves direct participation by a physician through withdrawing or withholding treatment. It is not against public policy to honor the patient's wishes when the patient is conscious and able to vocalize and carry out the decision with self-administered medication and no immediate or direct physician assistance. The Act's encompassing immunity for medical professionals reinforces the patient's right to enforce the decisions without fear that those who give effect to the patient's wishes will be prosecuted. There is nothing in the plain language of the law that indicates that the Act is against public policy. Baxter v. St., 2009 MT 449, 354 M 234, 224 P3d 1211 (2009).

50-9-106. Consent by others to withholding or withdrawal of treatment.

Commissioner's Comments

Section 7 [50-9-106] provides a procedure by which an attending physician may obtain consent to the withholding or withdrawal of life-sustaining treatment in the absence of an effective declaration. It draws upon the definitions of the Act, as well as those sections bearing on the process for and the legal effect of withholding or withdrawal of treatment, but in most other respects it is free-standing. It can therefore simply be inserted as a new section in existing statutes that follow the original 1985 Uniform Act. For states that might want to adopt the Section 2 [50-9-103] amendments, but not the Section 7 [50-9-106] amendments, Section 7 [50-9-106] can simply be deleted.

The purpose of Section 7 [50-9-106] is to authorize persons other than the patient who are in a close familial relationship to the patient to consent to the withholding or withdrawal of life-sustaining treatment when the patient has no prior declaration, or when a prior declaration is not effective. Prior declarations might not be effective for a variety of reasons, including for example the expiration of a time limit, the failure to have the declaration properly witnessed, or the absence of a condition precedent contained in the declaration, such as the death or disability of a designated decision-maker.

Section 7 [50-9-106] authorizes binding consent to the withholding or withdrawal of life-sustaining treatment for qualified patients. Members of the patient's family in designated priority order may consent to withholding or withdrawal of life-sustaining treatment, and such consent will be treated as if the individual had given it. Consent by the designated family members, however, must be given in good faith, and is not valid if it would conflict with the expressed intention of the patient.

The consent provision of section 7 [50-9-106] differs from the designation of another to make decisions under Section 2 [50-9-103]. Because the "consent" does not constitute a declaration under the Act, provisions that impose an obligation on the physician to seek out a designee under a declaration, that make the designee's decisions "govern" treatment, and that require transfer by a physician under Section 8 [50-9-203], do not apply. Section 7 [50-9-106], in short, is not a full alternative to a declaration, but is rather a means by which the attending physician can obtain legally reliable consent to the withholding or withdrawal of treatment for individuals in a terminal condition, should that be needed in the circumstances. Section 7 [50-9-106] neither constitutes a de jure appointment of family to make such decisions in all cases, nor does it limit treatment authority authorized under other law.

Effect on Health Care — Rights and Duties

50-9-201. Recording determination of terminal condition and content of declaration.

Commissioner's Comments

Section 5 [50-9-201] of the Act requires that an attending physician record the determination that the patient is in a terminal condition in the patient's medical records. The section provides that an attending physician must know of the declaration's existence. It is anticipated that knowledge may in some instances occur through oral communication between physicians. If the attending physician determines that the patient is in a terminal condition, and has been notified of the declaration, the physician is to make the determination of terminal condition, as defined in Section 1(8) [50-9-102], part of the patient's medical records. There is no explicit requirement that the physician inform the patient of the terminal condition. That decision is to be left to the physician's professional discretion under existing standards of care. The Act also does not require, as do many statutes, that a physician other than the attending physician concur in the terminal condition determination. It appears to be the established practice of most physicians to request a second opinion or, more often, review by a panel or committee established as a matter of hospital procedure, and the Act is not intended to discourage such a practice. Requiring it, however, would almost inevitably freeze in a single process or set of processes for review in this evolving area of medicine. Because existing policies and regulations typically address the review issue, requiring a specific form of review in the Act was viewed as an unnecessary regulation of normal hospital procedures. Moreover, in smaller or rural health facilities a second qualified physician or review mechanism may not be readily available to confirm the attending physician's determination.

The physician must record the terms of the declaration in the medical record so that its specific language or any special provisions are known at later stages of treatment. It is assumed that "terms" of the declaration will be a copy of the declaration itself in most instances, although cases of an emergency character may arise, for example, in which the contents of a declaration can be reliably conveyed, and where obtaining a copy of the declaration prior to making decisions governed by it will be impracticable. In such cases, the terms of the declaration will suffice for recording purposes under Section 5 [50-9-201].

50-9-202. Treatment of qualified patients.

Commissioner's Comments

Section 6(a) [50-9-202(1)] recognizes the right of patients who have made a declaration and are determined to be in a terminal condition to make decisions regarding use of life-sustaining procedures. Until unable to do so, such patients have the right to make such decisions independently of the terms of the declaration. In affording patients a "right to make decisions regarding use of life-sustaining procedures," the Act is intended to reflect existing law pertaining to this issue. As Sections 11(e) [50-9-205(5)] and (f) [50-9-205(6)] indicate, qualifications on a patient's right to force the carrying out of those decisions in a manner contrary to law or accepted standards of medical practice, for example, are not intended to be overridden.

In Section 6(b) [50-9-202(2)] the Act uses the term "comfort care" in defining procedures that may be applied notwithstanding a declaration instructing withdrawal or withholding of life-sustaining treatment. The purpose for permitting continuation of life-sustaining treatment deemed necessary for comfort care or alleviation of pain is to allow the physician to take appropriate steps to insure comfort and freedom from pain, as dictated by reasonable medical standards. Many existing statutes employ the term "comfort care" in connection with the alleviation of pain, and the Act follows this example. Although the phrase "to alleviate pain" arguably is subsumed within the term comfort care, the additional specificity was considered helpful for both the doctor and layperson.

Section 6(b) [50-9-202(2)] does not set out a separate rule governing the provision of nutrition and hydration. Instead, each is subject to the same considerations of necessity for comfort care and alleviation of pain as are all other forms of life-sustaining treatment. If nutrition and hydration are not necessary for comfort care or alleviation of pain, they may be withdrawn. This approach was deemed preferable to the approach in a few existing statutes, which treat nutrition and hydration as comfort care in all cases, regardless of circumstances, and exclude comfort care from the life-sustaining treatment definition.

It is debatable whether physicians or other professionals perceive the providing of nourishment through intravenous feeding apparatus or nasogastric tubes as comfort care in all cases or whether such procedures at times merely prolong the dying process. Whether procedures to provide nourishment should be considered life-sustaining treatment or comfort care appears to depend on the factual circumstances of each case and, therefore, such decisions should be left to the physician, exercising reasonable medical judgment. Declarants may, however, specifically express their views regarding continuation or noncontinuation of such procedures in the declaration, and those views will control.

Section 6(c) [50-9-202(3)] addresses the problem of a qualified patient who is pregnant. The states which address this issue typically require that the declaration be given no force or effect during the pregnancy. Because this requirement inadvertently may do more harm than good to the fetus, Section 6(c) [50-9-202(3)] provides a more suitable, if more complicated, standard. It is possible to hypothesize a situation in which life-sustaining treatment, such as medication, may prove fatal to a fetus which is at or near the point of viability outside the womb. In such cases, the Act's provision would permit the life-sustaining treatment to be withdrawn or withheld as appropriate in order best to assure survival of the fetus. Also, for example, if the qualified patient is only a few weeks pregnant and the physician, pursuant to reasonable medical judgment, determines that it is not probable that the fetus could develop to a point of viability outside the womb even with application of life-sustaining treatment, such treatment may also be withheld or withdrawn. Thus, the pregnancy provision attempts to honor the terminally-ill patient's right to refuse life-sustaining treatment without jeopardizing the likelihood of life for the fetus.

In the original Rights of the Terminally Ill Act, adopted by the Conference in 1985, Section 6(c) [50-9-202(3)] included the introductory phrase "Unless the declaration otherwise provides." In the current Act the phrase has been eliminated from Section 6(c) [50-9-202(3)] in order to conform with a similar provision in Section 7 [50-9-106]. Under the current provision, life-sustaining treatment may not be withdrawn from a woman known to be pregnant if it is probable that the fetus will develop to live birth with continuation of the treatment, notwithstanding expressed views of the patient to the contrary. In view of the requirement that development to birth be probable, and the frequently complicating impact of prolonged life-sustaining treatment for a terminal patient, the provisions is likely to have an impact in relatively narrow circumstances.

Nevertheless, in states that wish to accommodate the declaration of a pregnant woman, the wording from the prior version of the Act may be used. Differences from the Uniform Act in this specific application would not undermine the interest in uniformity served by the Act.

50-9-203. Transfer of patients.

Commissioner's Comments

Section 8 [50-9-203] is designed to address situations in which a physician or health-care provider is unwilling to make and record a determination of terminal condition, or to respect the medically reasonable decisions of the patient or designee regarding withholding or withdrawal of life-sustaining procedures, due to personal convictions or policies unrelated to medical judgment called for under the Act. 50-9-204. Immunities.

Commissioner's Comments

Section 9 [50-9-204] provides immunities for persons acting pursuant to the declaration and in accordance with the Act. Immunities are extended in Sections 9(a)-(c) [50-9-204(1) through (3)] to physicians as well as persons operating under the physician's direction or with the physician's authorization, to facilities in which the withholding or withdrawal of life-sustaining procedures occurs, and to designees or persons authorized to consent under Sections 2 [50-9-103] or 7 [50-9-106]. Section 9(b) [50-9-204(2)] serves both to immunize physicians from liability as long as reasonable medical judgment is exercised, and to impose "reasonable medical standards" as the criterion that should govern all of the specific medical decisions called for throughout the Act. Section 9(b) [50-9-204(2)], in conjunction with Section 11(f) [50-9-205(6)], therefore, avoids the need to restate the medical standard in each section of the Act requiring a medical judgment.

50-9-206. Penalties.

Commissioner's Comments

Section 10 [50-9-206] provides criminal penalties for specific conduct that violates the Act. Subsections (a) and (b) [50-9-206(1) and (2)] provide that a physician's failure to transfer a patient or record the diagnosis of terminal condition constitutes a misdemeanor. Subsection (c) [50-9-206(3)] makes certain willful actions which could result in the unauthorized prolongation of life a misdemeanor. Subsection (d) [50-9-206(4)] governs acts which are intended to cause the unauthorized withholding or withdrawal of life-sustaining treatment, thereby advancing death. Subsections (e) and (f) [50-9-206(5) and (6)] concern situations that may be coercive, and therefore are against public policy.

Some of the criminal penalties—particularly subsection (d) [50-9-206(4)]—depart significantly from most existing statutes. Most statutes provide penalties for intentional conduct that actually causes the death of a declarant, and define such conduct as murder or a high degree felony. The Act does not take this approach. Assuming that such conduct will already be covered by a state's criminal statutes, the Act only addresses the situations in which the actor falsifies or forges the declaration of another or willfully conceals or withholds knowledge of revocation. To be criminally sanctioned as a misdemeanor under the Act the circumscribed conduct need not cause the death of a declarant. The approach taken by most states, that of providing a felony penalty for those acts that actually caused death, was considered unnecessary, as existing criminal law will also apply pursuant to Section 10(g) [50-9-206(7)]. A specific penalty for the conduct described in Section 10(d) [50-9-206(4)], however, was deemed appropriate, as existing criminal codes may not adequately address it.

end-of-life decisions even if enforcement of those decisions involves direct participation by a physician through withdrawing or withholding treatment. It is not against public policy to honor the patient's wishes when the patient is conscious and able to vocalize and carry out the decision with self-administered medication and no immediate or direct physician assistance. The Act's encompassing immunity for medical professionals reinforces the patient's right to enforce the decisions without fear that those who give effect to the patient's wishes will be prosecuted. There is nothing in the plain language of the law that indicates that the Act is against public policy. Baxter v. St., 2009 MT 449, 354 M 234, 224 P3d 1211 (2009).

General

Part Compiler's Comments

1991 Statement of Intent: The statement of intent attached to Ch. 581, L. 1991, provided: "A statement of intent is required for this bill because [section 5] [50-10-105] grants the department of health and environmental sciences [now department of public health and human services] authority to adopt rules implementing the bill. It is intended that the rules adopt by reference the board of medical examiners' do not resuscitate protocol and address, among other things, a standard form of statewide do not resuscitate identification, a form for a do not resuscitate order, training for emergency medical services personnel to inform them of the provisions of the bill and its implementing rules, and standards that emergency medical personnel shall follow when presented with do not resuscitate identification. It is also the intent of the legislature that the do not resuscitate identification adopted pursuant to this bill may be identical to that adopted pursuant to Title 50, chapter 9, and that the rules adopted pursuant to this bill may be correlated and intermingled with the rules adopted pursuant to 50-9-110."

Effective Date: Section 7, Ch. 581, L. 1991, provided: "[This act] is effective on passage and approval." Approved April 23, 1991.

Case Notes

Admission of Death Certificate With Hearsay Statement That Decedent Was Passenger — Harmless Error: In a negligent homicide case, defendant contended decedent was driving. The trial court admitted a death certificate with a statement in it that decedent was a passenger in the truck that crashed. While the death certificate was admissible to prove the victim's death, the statement about the victim being a passenger was based on hearsay and should have been excised. However, the Supreme Court held that failure to do so was harmless error in light of the testimony by other witnesses that established a substantial basis for concluding that decedent was a passenger. St. v. Gould, 216 M 455, 704 P2d 20, 42 St. Rep. 946 (1985).

1999 Amendment: Chapter 416 in (4) after "certificate" substituted "must be issued upon request of any person" for "containing information or data that would identify any person or institution named in a certificate or report and the cause of death information may not be issued, except as follows:

(a) upon specific request of the spouse, children, parents, or other next of kin of the decedent or their respective authorized representatives, as specified by department rule;

(b) when a documented need for the cause of death to establish a legal right or claim has been demonstrated, as specified by department rule;

(c) when the request for the copy is made by or on behalf of a person or entity that provides monetary benefits to the decedent's survivors or beneficiaries, as may be specified by department rule;

(d) upon specific request by federal, state, or local agencies for research or administrative purposes and when approved for release by the department;

(e) when needed for research activities and approved for release by the department; or

(f) upon receipt by the department of an order directed to the department from a court of competent jurisdiction ordering the release"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective October 1, 1999.

1997 Amendment: Chapter 118 in (3), at end of first sentence and near middle of third sentence after "date of", substituted "filing" for "registration".

1995 Statement of Intent: The statement of intent attached to Ch. 515, L. 1995, provided: "A statement of intent is required for this bill because the bill gives the department of health and environmental sciences [now department of public health and human services] authority to adopt administrative rules.

Attorney General's Opinions

Confidentiality of Marriage License Applications: Pursuant to 50-15-122 and this section, an application for a marriage license should be treated as a confidential record once the application is completed and filed with the Clerk of the District Court. Once a marriage is reported by the Department of Public Health and Human Services, the Department or the Clerk of the District Court may disclose to the public the record of marriage, consisting of the names of the bride and groom, the date and place of the marriage, the name of the officiant, and whether the ceremony was religious or civil. 48 A.G. Op. 10 (2000). See also 48 A.G. Op. 17 (2000), in which the Attorney General clarified 48 A.G. Op. 10 (2000), by holding that 48 A.G. Op. 10 (2000), applied to all marriage applications on file with a Clerk of the District Court, not to only applications filed after the date of that opinion. (See 2001 amendment.)

Parties to Whom Marriage Application Information May Be Released: The Clerk of the District Court may not divulge or provide copies of an application for a marriage license unless the requestor is the applicant; the applicant's spouse, child, parent, or guardian; or an authorized representative, which includes: (1) a person who has a general power of attorney for a resident; (2) a person appointed by a court to manage the personal or financial affairs of a resident; (3) a representative payee; (4) a resident's next of kin; or (5) a sponsoring agency. 48 A.G. Op. 10 (2000). See also 48 A.G. Op. 17 (2000), in which the Attorney General clarified 48 A.G. Op. 10 (2000), by holding that under 50-15-122, a Clerk of the District Court may allow public inspection and copying of a marriage certificate filed pursuant to 40-1-321, but not of the marriage license itself. Confidentiality of Marriage License Applications: Pursuant to 50-15-121 and this section, an application for a marriage license should be treated as a confidential record once the application is completed and filed with the Clerk of the District Court. Once a marriage is reported by the Department of Public Health and Human Services, the Department or the Clerk of the District Court may disclose to the public the record of marriage, consisting of the names of the bride and Right of Access to Sealed Original Birth Records: Considering the legislative history, 50-15-206, as amended in 1979, prohibited disclosure of illegitimacy of birth or information from which illegitimacy can be ascertained except upon court order. This conflicted with 50-15-304, which would allow an adopted illegitimately born person access to his or her sealed original birth records upon demand. Section 50-15-206(1)(a) was enacted as part of a 1979 amendment. Under 1-2-203, ". . . the new provisions are to be considered as having been enacted at the time of the amendment". Earlier statutes are controlled by later statutes when they conflict, so 50-15-206 controls. Additionally, when a specific statute conflicts with a general statute, the specific statute controls to the extent of any conflict. Under this rule of construction, 50-15-304 was considered the general statute dealing with the birth records of adopted persons, and 50-15-206(1)(a) was considered a more specific statute regulating disclosure of birth records of illegitimate adopted persons, the statute which controlled. Therefore, legitimately born adopted persons of legal age may have their sealed original birth records opened on demand while illegitimately born adopted persons may apply to the court for disclosure of their sealed original birth records. 38 A.G. Op. 62 (1980).

Confidentiality of Marriage License Applications: Pursuant to 50-15-121 and 50-15-122, an application for a marriage license should be treated as a confidential record once the application is completed and filed with the Clerk of the District Court. Once a marriage is reported by the Department of Public Health and Human Services, the Department or the Clerk of the District Court may disclose to the public the record of marriage, consisting of the names of the bride and groom, the date and place of the marriage, the name of the officiant, and whether the ceremony was religious or civil. 48 A.G. Op. 10 (2000). See also 48 A.G. Op. 17 (2000), in which the Attorney General clarified 48 A.G. Op. 10 (2000), by holding that 48 A.G. Op. 10 (2000), applied to all marriage applications on file with a Clerk of the District Court, not to only applications filed after the date of that opinion. (See 2001 amendment to 50-15-122.)

Declaration of Marriage Without Solemnization — No Fee Required: A marriage license is not a requirement for a valid marriage by written declaration. No fee may be charged for filing the declaration of marriage without solemnization. (Annotator's note: Chapter 12, L. 1983, established a fee for filing a declaration.) 37 A.G. Op. 12 (1977).

Attorney General's Opinions

Right of Access to Sealed Original Birth Records: Considering the legislative history, 50-15-206 (now repealed), as amended in 1979, prohibits disclosure of illegitimacy of birth or information from which illegitimacy can be ascertained except upon court order. This conflicts with this section, which would allow an adopted illegitimately born person access to his or her sealed original birth records upon demand. Section 50-15-206(1)(a) (now repealed) was enacted as part of a 1979 amendment to that section. Under 1-2-203, ". . . the new provisions are to be considered as having been enacted at the time of the amendment". Earlier statutes are controlled by later statutes when they conflict, so 50-15-206(1)(a) (now repealed) controls. Additionally, when a specific statute conflicts with a general statute, the specific statute controls to the extent of any conflict. Under this rule of construction, this section was considered the general statute dealing with the birth records of adopted persons, and 50-15-206(1)(a) (now repealed) was considered a more specific statute regulating disclosure of birth records of illegitimate adopted persons, the statute which controlled. Therefore, legitimately born adopted persons of legal age may have their sealed original birth records opened on demand while illegitimately born adopted persons may apply to the court for disclosure of their sealed original birth records. 38 A.G. Op. 62 (1980).

2001 Amendment: Chapter 258 in (2) in first sentence after "physician" inserted "the certifying advanced practice registered nurse" and in second and third sentences inserted references to advanced practice registered nurses. Amendment effective October 1, 2001.

1999 Amendment: Chapter 27 in (1) after "on the deceased" inserted ", including the deceased's social security number, if any". Amendment effective January 1, 2001, unless contingency occurs. The codifier has bracketed the amendment.

Effective Date — Contingent Termination: Section 3(2), Ch. 27, L. 1999, provided: "(2) [Section 2] [this section] is effective January 1, 2001, unless prior to that date the director of the department of public health and human services certifies to the governor and the secretary of state in writing that the federal government has granted this state an exemption from the requirement to have a social security number on a death certificate and the exemption covers the period January 1, 2001, through July 1, 2001, in which case [section 2] [this section] is void." An exemption was not received by January 1, 2001, so the previously bracketed language contained in [section 2] referring to a person's social security number became effective.

1997 Amendments: Chapter 118 in (2) inserted second sentence concerning completion of medical certification and at end of third sentence inserted "or, if the place of death is unknown, where the dead body was discovered"; inserted (3) concerning dead body found in the state where place of death is unknown; inserted (4) concerning death occurring in a moving vehicle; and made minor changes in style.

Chapter 552 in (1) inserted "including the deceased's social security number, if any". Amendment effective July 1, 1997. Amendment terminated April 24, 1998, pursuant to section 104(4)(d), Ch. 552, L. 1997.

Contingent Termination — Request for Federal Exemptions: Section 104, Ch. 552, L. 1997, contained the following contingent termination provisions and order that the Department of Public Health and Human Services seek federal exemptions:

"(1) [Sections 9, 11, 22 through 24, 93, and 95] [37-1-307, 40-1-107, 40-4-105, 40-5-922, 40-5-924, 50-15-403, and 61-5-107] and the bracketed language in [sections 1 through 3, 10, 25, 45, and 89] [40-4-204, 40-5-226, 40-5-901, 40-5-906, 40-5-907, 40-5-923, and 40-6-116] terminate on the date of the suspension if the federal government suspends federal payments to this state for this state's child support enforcement program and for this state's program relating to temporary assistance to needy families because of this state's failure to enact law as required by the federal Personal Responsibility and Work Opportunity Reconciliation Act of 1996.

(2) [Sections 9, 11, 22 through 24, 93, and 95] [37-1-307, 40-1-107, 40-4-105, 40-5-922, 40-5-924, 50-15-403, and 61-5-107] and the bracketed language in [sections 1 through 3, 10, 25, 45, and 89] [40-4-204, 40-5-226, 40-5-901, 40-5-906, 40-5-907, 40-5-923, and 40-6-116] terminate on the date that a final decision is rendered in federal court invalidating the child support provisions of the federal Personal Responsibility and Work Opportunity Reconciliation Act of 1996.

(3) If the director of the department of public health and human services certifies to the governor and the secretary of state in writing that one of the following provisions is no longer required by federal law because of repeal of or amendment to federal statutes that require that provision, the provision terminates on the date the certification takes effect:

(a) [section 9] [40-5-922];

(b) [section 11] [40-5-924];

(c) [sections 22 through 24] [37-1-307, 40-1-107, and 40-4-105];

(d) [section 93] [50-15-403];

(e) [section 95] [61-5-107];

(f) the bracketed provisions in [sections 1 through 3, 10, 25, 45, and 89] [40-4-204, 40-5-226, 40-5-901, 40-5-906, 40-5-907, 40-5-923, and 40-6-116].

(4) If the director of the department of public health and human services certifies to the governor and the secretary of state in writing that the federal government has granted this state an exemption from one of the following provisions, the provision terminates on the date the exemption takes effect:

(a) [section 9] [40-5-922];

(b) [section 11] [40-5-924];

(c) [sections 22 through 24] [37-1-307, 40-1-107, and 40-4-105];

(d) [section 93] [50-15-403, certification filed April 24, 1998];

(e) [section 95] [61-5-107];

(f) the bracketed provisions in [sections 1 through 3, 10, 25, 45, and 89] [40-4-204, 40-5-226, 40-5-901, 40-5-906, 40-5-907, 40-5-923, and 40-6-116].

(5) (a) The department of public health and human services shall do everything reasonably within its power to obtain, as soon as possible, federal government exemptions from the provisions listed in subsection (4).

(b) Because section 395(c) of the federal Personal Responsibility and Work Opportunity Reconciliation Act of 1996 (PRWORA) allows a grace period for states to amend their constitutions in order to comply with PRWORA and because the Montana legislature believes that the section of PRWORA prohibiting a jury trial in a paternity proceeding violates Article II, section 26, of the Montana constitution and is therefore rejected, the department of public health and human services shall seek a federal government exemption from the jury trial prohibition in PRWORA as the first exemption it seeks under subsection (5)(a). [This exemption was received on December 8, 1997.]

(6) [Sections 9, 11, 22 through 24, 93, and 95] [37-1-307, 40-1-107, 40-4-105, 40-5-922, 40-5-924, 50-15-403, and 61-5-107] and the bracketed language in [sections 1 through 3, 10, 25, 45, and 89] [40-4-204, 40-5-226, 40-5-901, 40-5-906, 40-5-907, 40-5-923, and 40-6-116] terminate July 1, 1999.

(7) If the bracketed language in [sections 1 through 3, 10, 25, 45, and 89] [40-4-204, 40-5-226, 40-5-901, 40-5-906, 40-5-907, 40-5-923, and 40-6-116] terminates, the code commissioner is instructed to renumber subsections, adjust internal references, and correct grammar and arrangement." Section 1, Ch. 27, L. 1999, revised this note by deleting references to [section 93], which amended 50-15-403.

1995 Amendment: Chapter 515 in (1) inserted "that weighs at least 350 grams at death or, if the weight is unknown, has reached 20 completed weeks of gestation at death"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective January 1, 1996.

1993 Amendment: Chapter 287 in (1), near beginning, substituted "disposition of a dead body or fetus" for "interment" and after "personal data" inserted reference to data on deceased and on parents of fetus; in (2), at beginning, inserted "The person in charge of disposition of the dead body or fetus", substituted "certifying physician" for "physician last in attendance upon the deceased", substituted "for medical certification of" for "or the state medical examiner, who shall certify", after "cause of death deleted "according to his best knowledge and belief", substituted language requiring completion of certification of cause of death for former (2)(b) and (3) that provided alternatives allowing presentation of fetal death certificate to person in attendance or notification to local registrar of attendance or lack of attendance at death (see 1993 Session Law for text), and at end substituted "in the registration area where the death occurred" for "within 3 days after the occurrence"; and made minor changes in style.

1993 Statement of Intent: The statement of intent attached to Ch. 287, L. 1993, provided: "Passage and approval of this bill would require the department of health and environmental sciences [now department of public health and human services] to amend existing rules and possibly to adopt new rules under the authority already delegated under 50-1-202(20) and 50-15-102. The amendments to 50-15-403 replace the current 3-day filing requirement for a death certificate with timeframes established by rule. The legislature intends that these timeframes remain relatively brief but that good cause be recognized when the person in charge of disposition of a dead body is unable to obtain a physician's certification within the set time.

The department shall amend or replace its burial transit permit rule, Rule 16.6.906, Administrative Rules of Montana, to conform with the changes made by 50-15-405. The department may, in replacing this permit with a dead body removal authorization, require any information as to contemplated time, site, and method of disposition as the performance of its vital statistics mission requires."

1997 Amendment: Chapter 101 substituted current text concerning persons or entities required to report information regarding person with a tumor for former text that read: "A hospital that provides to any person medical services relating to a tumor designated as reportable by the department or a clinical laboratory, as defined in 50-5-101, that is not owned or operated by a hospital and that provides laboratory services relating to such a tumor shall make available to the department all medical and personal information and laboratory results relevant to that person's treatment and condition on forms provided by the department."

1985 Amendment: Inserted language requiring a clinical laboratory not owned or operated by a hospital to make its laboratory results relative to a tumor available to the department; and substituted "person's treatment and condition" for "person's treatment".

Statement of Intent: The statement of intent attached to SB 37 (Ch. 354, L. 1981) read: "A statement of intent is required for this bill because it creates rulemaking authority for the Department of Health and Environmental Sciences [now Department of Public Health and Human Services] to administer a Montana Central Tumor Registry. Rulemaking is primarily necessary to implement Section 3, which requires a hospital to report to the Department medical and personal information relevant to the treatment of any person having a tumor listed as reportable by the Department and given hospital medical services relating to that tumor. Rules would list precisely which tumors would be reportable and specify the information on each tumor patient to be reported. Those tumors most likely to be included are malignant neoplasms; carcinoid tumors, whether malignant, benign, or NOS ("not otherwise specified"); and benign tumors of the brain; but others may be added if their reporting becomes significant either statistically or as an aid to patient treatment, or they are requested to be added by physicians or hospitals.

As for the information to be reported, the rules will ask for:

(1) Medical and personal information on patients with tumors which assists the registry to develop statistics helpful to future health planning and medical treatment such as those showing survival rates for different types of cases and treatments, rates of certain cancers in areas of Montana or particular occupations, etc. (e.g. diagnosis made; medication and/or therapy given; occupation, sex and age of patient).

(2) Sufficient information to allow the registry to track and facilitate follow-up treatment of tumor cases (e.g. name; address; physician; hospital; and any subsequent treatment by hospital, whether or not tumor-related; social security number).

First adopted by the Senate Public Health, Welfare, and Safety Committee on the 26th day of January, 1981."

Documents Dealing With Patient Care and Treatment Discoverable Under Hospital Peer Review Statutes — Data Protected From Disclosure: The net effect of the hospital peer review statutes is that health care information belongs to both the patient and the hospital, while data is a matter of an internal administrative function. To the extent that documents over which a hospital seeks protection are relevant to a patient's care and treatment, they are discoverable, but to the extent that documents are data in connection with the professional training, supervision, or discipline of the hospital medical staff, they are not discoverable. The right of confidentiality created under 50-16-205 is subject to the patient's right of access to records concerning that patient's own hospital care and treatment, consistent with the Uniform Health Care Information Act, which also provides that a personal representative of a deceased patient may exercise all the deceased patient's rights, including the right of the deceased's estate to examine or copy all of the deceased patient's health care information. Huether v. District Court, 2000 MT 158, 300 M 212, 4 P3d 1193, 57 St. Rep. 647 (2000), distinguishing Sistok v. Kalispell

Regional Hosp., 251 M 38, 823 P2d 251 (1991), and overruling Sistok to the extent that that case may not be read to apply to a hospital patient seeking disclosure of information concerning that patient's care or treatment. (See 2001 amendment to 50-16-201.)

2013 Amendment: Chapter 265 in definition of data in (a) in middle inserted "may be shared with a medical practitioner, including the medical practitioner being reviewed, and that" and inserted last sentence regarding subsequent evaluations and analysis; in definition of incident report or occurrence report in (a)(i) substituted "may be but is not required to be created by the staff involved" for "created", inserted (a)(ii) regarding factual rendition of event, and in (b) substituted current language for former (b) that read: "(b) The terms do not include any subsequent evaluation of the event in response to an incident report or occurrence report by a utilization review, peer review, medical ethics review, quality assurance, or quality improvement committee"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective October 1, 2013.

Preamble: The preamble attached to Ch. 265, L. 2013, provided: "WHEREAS, the Montana Legislature adopted Montana's peer review statutes over 50 years ago, noting that peer review is in the interest of the public health; and

WHEREAS, in Sistok v. Kalispell Regional Hospital, 251 Mont. 38, 823 P.2d 251 (1991), the Montana Supreme Court held that Montana's peer review statutes confer a privilege on data created by or at the request of a medical review committee; and

WHEREAS, in Sistok v. Kalispell Regional Hospital, the Montana Supreme Court also observed that the statute providing for confidentiality was developed and the privilege was conferred by the Legislature as a matter of public policy to encourage health care providers to join medical review committees in an effort to ensure the responsive and full discourse among the professionals involved and to promote an atmosphere free of apprehension so that constructive criticism could occur; and

WHEREAS, in Huether v. District Court, 2000 MT 158, 300 Mont. 212, 4 P.3d 1193, the Montana Supreme Court found that Montana's peer review statutes are typical of the statutes adopted by various states to encourage candor in medical review committees that review and evaluate the quality of medical care provided in their hospitals; and

WHEREAS, in Huether v. District Court, the Montana Supreme Court also noted that the goal of Montana's peer review statutes is to promote continuous improvement in the quality of health care delivery through review of standardized health care operations and the performance of doctors and staff; and

WHEREAS, the Legislature finds that the continuous review and improvement of health care is in the interest of all Montanans; and

WHEREAS, the Legislature finds it appropriate to revise certain definitions in order to clarify which information is privileged and which information is not privileged under Montana's peer review statutes."

Chapter 519 in definition of medical practitioner near end substituted "physician assistant" for "physician assistant-certified". Amendment effective October 1, 2005.

2003 Amendment: Chapter 396 in definition of data in (a) after "connection with" inserted "quality assessment or improvement activities, including" and inserted (b)(ii) providing that data does not include health care information that is used in whole or in part to make decisions about an individual who is the subject of the health care information; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective April 18, 2003.

2001 Amendment: Chapter 359 substituted definition of data for former definition that read: ""data" means written reports, notes, or records of tissue committees or other medical staff committees in connection with the professional training, supervision, or discipline of the medical staff of hospitals"; inserted definitions of health care facility, incident reports or occurrence reports, and medical practitioner; and made minor changes in style. Records of Hospital Medical Staff Committee Held Privileged — No Waiver Found in Administrator's Affidavit: Plaintiff sought to discover documents from a hospital medical staff committee supporting his theory that because of conditions placed upon the staff privileges of a physician previously suspended for performing his hospital duties while intoxicated, the relationship between the hospital and the physician changed from independent contractor to principal and agent. On appeal from a District Court order quashing a deposition subpoena and giving summary judgment to the defendant, the Supreme Court affirmed that the members of the hospital's medical staff committee were immune from subpoena. The Supreme Court held that this section applies to all members of the hospital's committee, to the hospital itself, and to patients whose files are reviewed by a committee and that even if the hospital had waived its privilege, it could not waive the privilege personal to the members of the committee. The Supreme Court also held that there was no issue as to the discoverable nature of the hospital administrator's files because there was no evidence in the record of any attempt to subpoena his files. Sistok v. Kalispell Regional Hosp., 251 M 39, 823 P2d 251, 48 St. Rep. 1151 (1991), distinguished in Huether v. Part 5
Uniform Health Care Information

Source: This part is derived from the Uniform Health-Care Information Act approved in 1985 by the National Conference of Commissioners on Uniform State Laws.

Prefatory Note: The prefatory note to the Uniform Health-Care Information Act provided: "The critical role that confidentiality plays in the provision of health care has been recognized almost from the inception of the medical profession. Gellman, Prescribing Privacy: The Uncertain Role of the Physician in the Protection of Patient Privacy, 62 N.C.L.Rev. 255 (1984) (hereinafter cited as Gellman). It is well accepted that confidentiality is essential to a patient's trust in a health-care provider and to a patient's willingness to supply information candidly for his or her benefit.

However, over the last several decades, a number of fundamental developments have threatened the confidentiality of health-care information. The emergence of third-party payment plans; the use of health-care information for nonhealth-care purposes; the growing involvement of government agencies in virtually all aspects of health care; and the exponential increase in the use of computers and automated information systems for health-care record information have combined to put substantial pressure on traditional confidentiality protections. Privacy Protection Study Commission, Personal Privacy in an Information Society, 283 (1977) (hereinafter cited as Privacy Commission Report).

To make matters worse from a privacy standpoint, the sheer amount of personal data kept in health-care records, and the number of individuals who monitor those records have mushroomed over the same period. It goes without saying that much of the information in health-care records is highly personal and, if disclosed improperly, may cause emotional, psychological, and physical harm to the patient. The Privacy Commission (1975-1977) and the National Commission on the Confidentiality of Health Record[s] (1976-1979) received several hundred complaints from patient describing harms they suffered as a result of the misuse of their health records. The Canadian "Krever Commission" (Report of the Commission of Inquiry into the Confidentiality of Health Information (1980)) documented several hundred instances of abuse of medical records.

For all of these reasons Congress, state legislatures, courts, and health professional organizations have struggled over the last 20 years to develop law and policy that restore patient privacy and confidentiality protections. Nevertheless, the great majority of states have not yet adopted comprehensive statutes that regulate the record-keeping practices of health-care providers.

In almost one-fifth of the states, comprehensive privacy acts—based more or less on the 1974 federal Privacy Act, 5 U.S.C. §552(a)—provide some assurance that state-held medical records will not be disclosed to third parties without first obtaining the patient's consent. E.g., Ark.Stat.Ann. §16-802 et seq.; Conn.Gen.Stat.Ann. §4-190 et seq.; Ind.Code Ann. §4-1-6-1; Mass.Gen.Laws ch. 30 §63, ch. 66A §§1-3, ch. 214 §3B; Minn.Stat.Ann. §15.162 et seq.; Ohio Rev.Code Ann. 1347.01 et seq.; Utah Code Ann. §63-50-1 et seq.; Va.Code §2.1-377 et seq.

However, only two types of health-record legislation are common to virtually every state. First, statutes in every state require health-care providers to report certain types of patient information to state agencies. Typically, these statutes require providers to report health data concerning their patients who have: violent injuries (gunshot and knife wounds are most common); contagious or infectious diseases; tuberculosis; venereal disease; occupational illnesses or injuries; certain congenital defects; and injuries from child abuse.

Secondly, almost every state recognizes some type of provider-patient privilege. The privilege permits the patient to restrict his physician (and occasionally other types of health professionals) from disclosing in many types of judicial proceedings, information received in confidence from the patient about the patient's health. Because a physician-patient privilege did not exist at common law, courts do not recognize a privilege in state without statutory provisions. (South Carolina, Texas, and Vermont do not have health-care provider-patient privilege statutes and are thus the exception to the rule.)

Most privilege statutes expressly provide that the privilege belongs to the patient and thus can be waived by the patient. Other circumstances in which physicians can be compelled to provide information to a court include court-ordered examinations, where child abuse is at issue, where involuntary hospitalization is at issue, and where the patient relies upon his medical condition as a defense.

It is difficult to generalize about privilege case law since it involves statutory, common law, and occasionally constitutional doctrines. However, privilege decisions seem increasingly to narrow the circumstances under which privilege can be claimed, and to expand exceptions requiring providers to provide health-record information. This trend confirms the opinion of many health-care professionals that the privilege doctrine is an increasingly fragile shield to protect the confidentiality of the health-care relationship. Gellman, supra, p. 3, at 272.

Virtually all major health professional groups, including the American Medical Association, the American Hospital Association, the American Nurses' Association, the American Psychiatric Association, the American Medical Record[s] Association, and the American Psychological Association, have adopted formal codes, guidelines, or policies regarding the handling of health records. For legislative audiences, the American Psychiatric Association, the American Medical Records Association, and the American Medical Association, among others, developed model health-record confidentiality statutes.

In drafting this Act, the Conference took into account the proposed standards and model statutes written by these health professional groups and national commissions. The Act embodies many of the standards and all of the principles found in the recommendations of the federal Privacy Protections Study Commission. Existing and proposed state and federal statutes were also reviewed and utilized.

Many of the organizations with a direct interest in the subject of this Act participated directly in the Conference's drafting process. These included the American Medical Association, the American Hospital Association, the American Medical Records Association, the American Psychiatric Association, the Health Insurance Association, the United States Department of Health and Human Services, the United States Department of Justice, and the American Bar Association. In addition, the Conference sought and received written input from numerous other interested organizations and individuals including the National Blood Bank Association, the Hospital Pharmacists Association, the American Society of Internal Medicine, the American Society of Law and Medicine, and others. Although such assistance is gratefully acknowledged, the Conference is solely responsible for the final product which was the subject of three years of effort by the Drafting Committee and was debated by the entire Conference in two separate years.

The contents of Article I [50-16-502] address more specifically the underlying reasons for the Act, as Legislative Findings."

Discovery of Medical Records Upon Commencement of Action for Damages Placing Mental and Physical Condition at Issue — Waiver of Physician-Patient Privilege as to Condition in Controversy: Plaintiff's child fell through the second story railing at the Montana State University-Bozeman library and suffered brain injuries. Plaintiff brought damage claims related to the child's injuries and claims related to plaintiff's own emotional distress, loss of consortium, and posttraumatic stress disorder. The state moved to compel production of all of plaintiff's health care records from before and after the fall. The District Court denied the motion, holding that the records were constitutionally protected and irrelevant to the case and therefore not discoverable. On appeal, the Supreme Court noted plaintiff's constitutional right to confidentiality of medical records, but cited State ex rel. Mapes v. District Court, 250 M 524, 822 P2d 91 (1991), for the holding that that right must be balanced against a defendant's right to defend itself in an informed manner and that records of prior physical or mental conditions are discoverable only if they relate to currently claimed damages. Here, plaintiff commenced an action for damages that placed in issue the mental and physical condition arising from the accident, thus waiving any physician-patient privilege as to the condition in controversy, and the state had the right to discover evidence related to prior medical conditions that was possibly connected to plaintiff's current damages. Denial of the discovery motion prejudiced the state's right to defend itself in an informed manner, constituting reversible error. Henricksen v. St., 2004 MT 20, 319 M 307, 84 P3d 38 (2004).

50-16-502. Legislative findings.

Official Comments

The inclusion of a statement of legislative findings is a common practice in privacy legislation. These findings aid agency officials, courts, and the public in identifying and properly applying the Act's purposes. The Conference's Uniform Information Practices Code contains a statement of "General Provisions" which sets forth the purposes to be served by the Information Practices Code.

The first statement recognizes the extraordinary sensitivity of health-care information. The second expresses the Act's view that patients should have access to their own health-care information and an opportunity to correct inaccurate or incomplete information. The Act seeks to give patients more control over their health-care information by giving them a right to see and copy their own records and to correct and amend their records when these records are in the hands of health-care providers.

The third statement expresses the view that health-care providers have an interest in assuring the confidentiality of health-care information and in being able to rely upon clear and certain rules to govern disclosure decisions. In this regard the Act permits patients to approve or disapprove disclosures by health-care providers to third parties in most instances. Moreover, the Act seeks to restrict and regulate the flow of health-care information to third parties by carefully limiting disclosures that can be made without patient consent; by restricting the acquisition of health-care information by compulsory process; and by imposing security requirements on health-care providers maintaining such data.

The fourth statement makes the point that many nonhealth-care providers obtain, use, and disclose health-care information for innumerable nonhealth-care purposes. It is the public policy of the state that a patient has an interest in the proper use and disclosure of the patient's health-care information even when the information is held by nonhealth-care providers. The purpose of this statement is to recognize that such rights exist as a matter of case law and other expressions of public policy and to assure that enactment of the Act—notwithstanding its general limitation to health-care providers—does not undercut health-record privacy rights that may exist under other law and in other contexts.

There are two reasons why the Act does not attempt to regulate the use or redisclosure of health-care information once such information is held by nonhealth-care providers (except in those limited circumstances set forth in Article II [50-16-525 through 50-16-530, 50-16-535, and 50-16-536] where a health-care provider makes health-care information available to third parties without the patient's consent and in order to meet the provider's needs or interests). First, the expectations that a patient and society can rightfully have concerning the use and disclosure of health-care information must necessarily change when health-care information is held by nonhealth-care providers. The type of relationship that nonhealth-care providers have with patients is inevitably different than the relationship that health-care providers have with patients. The interests that will be advanced or deterred by confidentiality are different; the needs of the nonhealth-care providers to use and disclose the information are different; and the threat to patient privacy interests is different. These issues are complex, and require different responses, depending on the identity of the particular holder of the record and the reasons for which the records are held.

Second, in recognition of these differing interests and needs Congress and state legislatures have already adopted, or are well along in the process of adopting, statutes that regulate the handling of personal information, including health-care information, when held outside of the health-care relationship. For example, the Fair Credit Reporting Act regulates the handling of health-care information by consumer reporting agencies. The Privacy Act of 1974 regulates the handling of health-care information by federal agencies. Over a dozen states have adopted statutes which regulate the handling of health-care information by state agencies. A model privacy protection act, promulgated by the National Association of Insurance Commissioners, and thus far adopted in over ten states, addresses the handling of health-care information by insurance carriers. Several states have adopted statutes which regulate the handling of health-care information by private employers.

These legislative developments indicate as an empirical matter that a health-care information statute should not cover the handling of health-care information by nonhealth-care providers. As a conceptual matter a health-care information statute should not attempt to cover health-care information in other record-keeping settings because the expectations, interests, needs, and threats posed by the use and disclosure of health-care information in these different record-keeping relationships vary so significantly.

No doubt for these reasons, virtually every record-keeping and privacy statute that has been adopted, including the Conference's Uniform Information Practices Code, regulates personal information according to the type of record-keeper holding the information, and not according to the type of personal information being held. In taking this approach Congress, state legislatures, and other legislative authors are acting in a manner that is consistent with the recommendations of the Privacy Protection Study Commission.

Notwithstanding all this, the extraordinarily sensitive nature of health-care information makes it appropriate to provide, as statement four does, that it is the public policy of the state that a patient retains his privacy interest in health-care information even after the information leaves the provider-patient relationship.

The fifth and final statement in the Findings section explains that a uniform law is necessary due to the movement of patients and their health-care information across state lines; the use of automated information systems; and the emergence of multi-state health-care providers.

Certainly, it is increasingly common for patients to have health-care information created in one state but used in another state. Given the mobility of patients, and the patients' use of providers located in different states, it is important for patients to be able to rely on uniform rules for patient access and confidentiality. Moreover, health-care information is increasingly maintained and communicated via automated information systems. The effective operation of these systems and their operation in a manner protective of patient interest is advanced by uniform confidentiality standards.

Furthermore, health care increasingly is provided by many different types of providers. In the early part of this century roughly 85 percent of all health professionals were physicians. Today physicians make up only about five percent of the total. Dilemma, A Report of the National Commission on the Confidentiality of Health Records (1977), at p. 2. Thus, patients' physicians' ethical tradition of confidentiality plays a diminishing role in assuring health-record privacy.

Moreover, not only are health-care occupations changing, so too is the corporate status of health-care providers. Increasingly, health care is provided by national corporations with health-care operations in many different states. Some of these corporations have begun to centralize their record-keeping operations. As a result of these changes in the health-care industry, it is of growing importance that providers be able to rely upon uniform confidentiality standards.

Case Notes

Revealing Limited Medical Information During Police Interview Not Considered Waiver of Constitutional Right to Confidentiality in Medical Records — Voluntary Medical Information Outside Scope of Fruit of Poisonous Tree Doctrine — Adequate Probable Cause for Investigative Subpoena of Medical Records: Bilant was involved in a three-car accident and was subsequently arrested for DUI and a seat belt violation. During an interview following the arrest, Bilant revealed to an officer that he had taken pain medication on the day of the accident. The officer called Bilant's health care provider for confirmation, and the provider confirmed that Bilant had a prescription for a drug similar to the pain medication that he mentioned. The officer then procured an investigative subpoena regarding documentation on all prescriptions issued to Bilant, including any advisory warnings, and the provider sent Bilant's entire medical file. Bilant contended that the state violated both his constitutional right to privacy and the statutory protections of 50-16-535. The state maintained that Bilant waived his claim of confidentiality in his medical information when he voluntarily revealed his use of pain medication to the officer. The Supreme Court agreed with Bilant. Medical records are quintessentially private and deserve the utmost constitutional protection. None of the statutory prerequisites for disclosure of the medical records were met. In deciding to reveal limited medical information in a police interview, Bilant did not forfeit his constitutional right to subsequently claim confidentiality in his medical records. The officer conducted an illegal search in seeking the constitutionally protected private medical information without probable cause and the benefit of an investigative subpoena under 46-4-301, and the information gleaned from the telephone call should have been suppressed. Bilant then contended that the use of the illegally obtained information formed an improper basis for the investigative subpoena and that the results of the subpoena should also have been suppressed pursuant to the fruit of the poisonous tree doctrine, which forbids the use of evidence that comes to light as the result of an initially illegal act. However, on this point, the Supreme Court disagreed with Bilant. One exception to the doctrine is that the derivative evidence is admissible if it is obtained from an independent source. Here, Bilant himself provided the source by giving voluntary medical information from other than the illegal telephone inquiry. The Supreme Court recognized that an investigative subpoena seeking constitutionally protected medical information requires greater justification for state access than the administration of justice rationale used to obtain public information under 46-4-301, so in reviewing the probable cause basis for constitutionally protected material, the court excised the illegal evidence from the application and reviewed the remaining information de novo to determine whether probable cause existed for issuing the subpoena. In this case, even when the information subject to suppression was excised, the remaining evidence established probable cause that a DUI was committed and underscored a compelling state interest in medical records related to prescription medicines in order to confirm Bilant's initial admission to the officer. Thus, the subpoena was issued in accordance with the statutory requirements for constitutionally protected medical records, and Bilant's conviction was affirmed. St. v. Bilant, 2001 MT 249, 307 M 113, 36 P3d 883 (2001). See also St. v. New, 276 M 529, 917 P2d 919 (1996), and St. v. Nelson, 283 M 231, 941 P2d 441 (1997).

50-16-504. Definitions.

Official Comments

This section contains the Act's definition.

Subsection (1) defines the term "audit." The definition of audit is important because the Act allows nonconsensual disclosure for the purpose of an "audit." See Section 2-104(10) [50-16-529(7)]. Audit is defined broadly to include government and private assessments, evaluations, determinations, or investigations relating to compliance with statutory, regulatory, fiscal, medical, or scientific standards, or compliance with a private or public program of payments to health-care providers. Thus, audit may include traditional governmental auditing as well as private health program auditing, including rate setting and rate review.

Audits also include assessments and investigations for licensing, accreditation, or certification of health-care facilities or providers by such organizations as the Joint Commission on Accreditation of Hospitals.

Organizations, such as hospital management companies, Blue Cross/Blue Shield and commercial insurers, which evaluate utilization, financial, or management practices under contractual arrangements with health-care facilities or providers also are included in this definition. These organizations, however, may not use their audit authority to obtain information to make decisions about payment of a particular patient's claim. Insurers can obtain information for claim purposes only by first obtaining the patient's consent, pursuant to Section 2-102 [50-16-526 and 50-16-527].

Subsection (2) defines "directory information" as the disclosure of the presence and general health condition of an in-patient in a health-care facility or one who is receiving emergency treatment in a health-care facility. Under the terms of Section 2-104(6) [50-16-529(5)], a health-care provider may disclose directory information without the patient's consent, unless the patient has instructed the health-care provider not to make the disclosure.

Disclosure of a patient's presence can include sufficient information to identify the patient and his location, including room and telephone numbers within the facility. While a facility is expected to exercise appropriate discretion to minimize the extent to which the disclosure of directory information jeopardizes patient privacy, disclosure of such information is generally proper absent instructions from the patient.

Subsection (3) defines "general health condition" to mean a generic description of the patient's health status such as "critical," "fair," "good," etc. The term "general health condition" does not include information about the diagnosis, symptomatology, or prognosis for the patient.

Subsection (4) defines "health care" broadly to include any type of service to diagnose, treat, or maintain a patient's physical or mental condition. The second part of the definition is included to make clear that medical procedures performed on one patient to help another, such as the withdrawal of blood by a bloodbank or a kidney transplant, are included.

Subsection (5) defines "health-care facility" to mean any physical location, such as a hospital, clinic, laboratory, or office which is maintained to permit a health-care provider to dispense health care.

Subsection (6) defines "health-care information" as any information in any form which relates to the patient's health care and can identify the patient. This definition is broad and includes all provider-maintained information, including a patient's personal health history, that both relates to health care and can be used to identify the patient. Health-care information does not include birth or death certificates or information which cannot be linked to a particular patient. Health-care information includes the record of disclosures of health-care information (the disclosure log). Providers are required to maintain such a log under Section 2-101(b) of the Act [50-16-525(2)].

Subsection (7) defines "health-care provider" to mean any person licensed, certified, or otherwise authorized by state law to provide health care as a business or a profession. The term "otherwise authorized" connotes some kind of formal recognition by appropriate authorities that the person is entitled to provide health care as a business or profession. Thus, family members providing health care are not covered, whereas licensed laboratories are covered.

However, this definition does not include pharmacists (except pharmacists that are employed by health-care providers, such as hospitals) or others who provide health care solely through the sale or dispensing of drugs or medical devices. Persons who dispense health care exclusively through the sale of drugs and medical devices—pharmacists primarily—are excluded because they traditionally have a different relationship with their patients than do health-care providers. The relationship more closely resembles a seller-customer relationship than a provider-patient relationship. In addition, pharmacists and drug companies have an information relationship that should not be disturbed in an Act designed to address problems in the provider-patient relationship.

Subsection (8) defines "institutional review board" (IRB) to mean any board, committee, or other group designated by an institution to protect the rights of human research subjects. The definition includes IRB's established under Section 474 of the Public Health Service Act or state law.

In the last few years, IRB's have become a familiar part of the medical landscape. Federal health-care facilities and most other medium to large health-care facilities have created IRB's to review requests for the conduct of human experimentation research. IRB's are used in this Act as the necessary approval mechanism for research projects which are authorized to obtain access, in the provider's discretion, to health-care information, without patient consent. If a particular facility does not have an IRB, it is expected that researchers will find an appropriate IRB. The Act authorizes providers to rely on a finding by any qualified IRB, even if that IRB is not affiliated with the provider.

Subsection (9) defines "maintain" broadly to mean any act of holding or controlling health-care information. A provider who maintains health-care information is subject to the requirements of the Act.

Subsection (10) defines "patient" to include both living and deceased individuals who receive or have received health care. The right of privacy survives death because reputation may be substantially harmed by the release of health-care information. When this occurs, family members and others may be harmed and so may the deceased's estate. The personal representative of the deceased, as set out in Section 6-102 [50-16-522], has the right to exercise this surviving right of privacy. See Boggess v. Aetna Life Insurance Co., 196 S.E.2d 172 (Ga.1973).

Subsection (11) defines "person" broadly to include any natural person or organizational entity, including trusts, partnerships, and corporations.

Confidentiality of Patients' Health Care Information — Costs of Producing Copies of Nonconfidential Information to Be Borne by Health Care Providers: In a class action suit seeking monetary damages for excessive fees allegedly charged for copies of patient medical records, the District Court concluded that patient names were not confidential and ordered that the health care providers produce the names and bear the cost of producing the information as to requests for copies. The Supreme Court held that names of medical patients are protected under constitutional and statutory law and vacated the portion of the order requiring the production of patients' names, noting that patient notification would have to be accomplished through other means, such as an opt-in notification. The order was affirmed to the extent that names of nonpatient requesters, such as attorneys and insurance companies whose privacy was not at issue, be provided. Further, because 50-16-525 requires health care providers to maintain patient records for 3 years, the District Court did not abuse it discretion in ordering the providers to bear the cost of producing the information. 50-16-511. Duty to adopt security safeguards.

Official Comments

Section 7-101 [this section] requires health-care providers to implement reasonable security safeguards for all health-care information which they maintain. The Act does not define "reasonable security safeguards." What are reasonable safeguards will vary depending upon the content of the health-care information; the type and location of the health-care provider; and other factors that are specific to the particular record-keeping environment.

Accordingly, reasonable security safeguards may include personnel security standards for record room personnel (e.g., personnel background checks); administrative security standards (rules concerning who may enter a record room or a nurses station); physical security safeguards (locked doors and file cabinets, for example); and in automated records systems, technological security standards (user unique access codes, for example).

Health-care information is sensitive and often commercially valuable information which may be the target of theft or improper inspection or acquisition. There are numerous examples of the theft or improper inspection or acquisition of health-care information. Perhaps the most notorious example concerned the indictment brought by a Denver grand jury against a private investigative firm for, among other things, using investigators dressed as hospital personnel to obtain and subsequently sell health-care information. Official Comments

This section requires health-care providers to make available to patients a description of the basic information rights accorded to patients whose health-care information is maintained by health-care providers. It also sets forth an easy-to-read model notice. Although this model notice need not be used verbatim, any notice must include a brief reference to the fact that the provider maintains health-care records; that patients have a right to see and copy those records; that patients have a right of correction concerning those records; that the provider will keep the patient's records confidential, subject to certain qualifications; and an identification of the person or office from whom the patient can obtain the patient's records or get additional information.

The Privacy Commission's recommendations include a similar proposal that health-care providers explain their information dissemination policies to patients and prospective patients. Privacy Commission Report at 313.

50-16-513. Retention of record.

Official Comments

This section requires a health-care provider to maintain health-care information for at least one year after a provider receives an authorization to disclose health-care information and for the period of time while a request for examination or copying or a request for correction or amendment is pending. Since the Act does not require providers otherwise to retain health-care information, this provision is necessary in order to prevent providers from avoiding the disclosure obligations or the examination and copying and correction and amendment requirements merely by destroying or transferring the health-care information in question.

50-16-521. Health care representatives.

Official Comments

Section 6-101(a) [subsection (1) of this section] states that an individual who is authorized under state law to consent to health care for a patient has the right to exercise all of the rights of a patient under this Act but only to the extent necessary to discharge his or her responsibility to consent to health care. It contemplates two types of authority: (1) an authorization by law under which, for example, parents and guardians may consent to health care; and (2) an authorization by instrument under which, for example, persons operating under a power of attorney or "health-care representatives" in states which have adopted the Model Health Care Consent Act may consent to health care.

Once a minor has come of age, parents no longer have a right to consent to the minor's health care and at that point their rights under the Act are extinguished because the exercise of these rights is no longer necessary to discharge their responsibilities. This means that parents of an adult child would not be able, absent their child's consent, to inspect records of his or her child's health care, as to which consent was given when the child was a minor.

Subsection 6-101(a) [subsection (1)] also provides that if a minor is authorized by law to consent to his or her own health care without parental consent, then the minor may exclusively exercise all of the rights of a patient under the Act as to information about the health care to which the minor lawfully consented. Many states have adopted laws permitting minors to consent to certain kinds of health care, but not to other kinds. See, e.g., Iowa Code Ann. §§125.33, 140.9 (1982) (minor can consent to treatment for venereal disease and drug dependency); Md.Ann.Code art. 43 §§135, 135A (1982) (minor can consent to treatment for venereal disease, drug abuse, alcoholism, pregnancy, contraception, emotional disorders, or sexual assault); Minn.Stat.Ann. §144.342 (1982) (minor can consent to treatment for pregnancy, venereal disease, alcohol, and other drug abuses). Thus, if a minor can consent and has consented to treatment for venereal disease, the minor enjoys all of the rights of a patient under this Act as to information pertaining to the venereal disease and its treatment. Accordingly, the minor can control access to this health-care information including access by his parents.

Under subsection (b) [subsection (2) of this section] a person authorized to act for a patient must make a good-faith effort to act in the best interests of the patient. This subsection attempts to insure that a person acting for a patient will act in a fiduciary manner and will not deliberately misuse or mishandle the patient's health-care information. This subsection does not attempt to define the "best interests" of a patient. However, the fiduciary standards are well defined in case law and issues relating to the handling of health-care record information pertaining to a guardian or ward has [sic] received increased attention. See Wals, "State Intervention on Behalf of 'Neglected' Children: A Search for Realistic Standards," 27 Stan.L.Rev. 985, 1031-33, (1975); In re Guardianship of Pescinski, 226 N.W.2d 180 (Wis. 1975). At a minimum, this subsection requires the person acting for the patient to make decisions about the handling of the patient's records that approximate the decisions that a reasonable person would make about the handling of his own records.

50-16-522. Representative of deceased patient.

Official Comments

This section follows from the Act's definition of patient in Section 1-102(11) [50-16-504(10)] in that it recognizes the possibility of substantial harm or embarrassment to the family, estate, or reputation of a deceased patient by the release of health-care information. Therefore, this Act gives representatives of deceased patients the authority to exercise all of the deceased patient's rights under the Act. Moreover, those rights are the same privacy rights under the Act as those of a living patient. See Boggess v. Aetna Life Insurance Co., 196 S.E.2d 172 (Ga.1973); Lorde v. Guardian Life Insurance Co., 300 N.Y.S. 721 (N.Y.Sup.Ct. 1937) (both decisions recognize that the physician-patient privilege does not expire upon the death of the patient).

The deceased patient's rights may be exercised by the decedent's personal representative and, in the absence of a personal representative, by those authorized to act for the decedent under state law.

Documents Dealing With Patient Care and Treatment Discoverable Under Hospital Peer Review Statutes — Data Protected From Disclosure: The net effect of the hospital peer review statutes is that health care information belongs to both the patient and the hospital, while data is a matter of an internal administrative function. To the extent that documents over which a hospital seeks protection are relevant to a patient's care and treatment, they are discoverable, but to the extent that documents are data in connection with the professional training, supervision, or discipline of the hospital medical staff, they are not discoverable. The right of confidentiality created under 50-16-205 is subject to the patient's right of access to records concerning that patient's own hospital care and treatment, consistent with the Uniform Health Care Information Act, which also provides that a personal representative of a deceased patient may exercise all the deceased patient's rights, including the right of the deceased's estate to examine or copy all of the deceased patient's health care information. Huether v. District Court, 2000 MT 158, 300 M 212, 4 P3d 1193, 57 St. Rep. 647 (2000), distinguishing Sistok v. Kalispell Regional Hosp., 251 M 38, 823 P2d 251 (1991), and overruling Sistok to the extent that that case may not be read to apply to a hospital patient seeking disclosure of information concerning that patient's care or treatment. (See 2001 amendments to 50-16-201, 50-16-203, and 50-16-205.)

50-16-525. Disclosure by health care provider.

Official Comments

This section prohibits a health-care provider from disclosing any health-care information about a patient without the patient's written authorization, unless the disclosure is permitted by Section 2-104 of this Act [50-16-529]. An authorization must comply with the requirements of Section 2-102 [50-16-526]. Disclosures made pursuant to an authorization must be limited to the terms of that authorization.

Subsection (b) [subsection (2) of this section] requires the health-care provider to maintain for three years a record of disclosures of written or otherwise recorded health-care information that the provider makes to any person who is providing the health-care provider with certain specified services. The subsection does not require that a record of oral disclosures be established or maintained. The disclosure record must contain the name and address of each recipient, the date of disclosure, and a description of the disclosed information (e.g., "x-rays," "full chart," or "all records relating to hospitalization for pneumonia"). The record of disclosure is to be maintained with the patient's health-care information where possible; however, if the records are kept in a form where that is not possible, the disclosure record should be readily accessible.

Nothing in this subsection requires a health-care provider to keep the underlying health-care records for a specific period of time, or indeed, to keep them at all, except for the provisions of Section 7-102 [50-16-527], which requires retention of records while either a request for access by a patient or a request for disclosure pursuant to a disclosure authorization is pending. The purpose of this Act is to protect patient confidentiality; record retention practices raise a different set of considerations and are governed by another body of law.

The categories of persons to whom disclosure can be made without the need for a disclosure record include independent contractors performing services for a health-care provider, such as data processing, as well as students or faculty of health-professional schools affiliated with a health-care facility. Persons who are not employees of a health-care provider, however, are subject to the special restrictions on redisclosure provided in Section 2-104(a)(2) [50-16-529(2)].

DECISIONS UNDER CURRENT LAW

Confidentiality of Patients' Health Care Information — Costs of Producing Copies of Nonconfidential Information to Be Borne by Health Care Providers: In a class action suit seeking monetary damages for excessive fees allegedly charged for copies of patient medical records, the District Court concluded that patient names were not confidential and ordered that the health care providers produce the names and bear the cost of producing the information as to requests for copies. The Supreme Court held that names of medical patients are protected under constitutional and statutory law and vacated the portion of the order requiring the production of patients' names, noting that patient notification would have to be accomplished through other means, such as an opt-in notification. The order was affirmed to the extent that names of nonpatient requesters, such as attorneys and insurance companies whose privacy was not at issue, be provided. Further, because this section requires health care providers to maintain patient records for 3 years, the District Court did not abuse it discretion in ordering the providers to bear the cost of producing the information. St. James Community Hosp., Inc. v. District Court, 2003 MT 261, 317 M 419, 77 P3d 534 (2003).

Investigative Subpoena for Medical Records Not Issued for Overly Broad Time Period: The District Court issued an investigative subpoena related to an accident on January 3, 2000, to compel production of Bilant's medical records back to 1996. The affidavit for subpoena was issued May 10, 2000. The health care provider supplied records back to 1991. Bilant moved to suppress the information on grounds that the subpoena was overly broad in supplying any information after the date of the accident and prior to the date specified in the subpoena. The Supreme Court affirmed the validity of the investigative subpoena. The inclusion of time between January 3 and May 10 did not render the subpoena defective because there was a legitimate nexus between prescriptions issued before January 3 and prescription refills issued during subsequent months. Further, if a health care provider discloses medical information beyond what is allowed by law, the remedy lies with the health care provider and not with law enforcement through a motion to suppress. The question of the production of medical records beyond those required by the subpoena was a matter beyond the scope of Supreme Court review, and receipt by the state of records that contained information outside the scope and time period requested did not justify suppression of those portions of the records sought by and yielded pursuant to an otherwise legally sufficient investigative subpoena. St. v. Bilant, 2001 MT 249, 307 M 113, 36 P3d 883 (2001).

Waiver of Physician-Patient Privilege by Workers' Compensation Claimant — Discovery: Although there is no direct statement in the Workers' Compensation Act or in the Procedural Rules of the Workers' Compensation Court regarding waiver of the physician-patient privilege, 39-71-604 and 39-71-605 imply that an injured employee, to sustain a right to workers' compensation benefits, must waive any privilege or claim of confidentiality as to medical information relating to compensability of his claim. If a claimant exercises his right under 26-1-805 or this section to prevent any medical witness from disclosing confidential health information, and subsequently application is made by the adverse party to the Workers' Compensation Court for an order authorizing discovery, the court should authorize such discovery as is relevant to the subject involved in the pending action. The information obtained must be reasonably necessary to determine compensability. Bowen v. Liberty Mut. Ins. Co., 229 M 84, 745 P2d 330, 44 St. Rep. 1799 (1987).

DECISIONS UNDER FORMER LAW

Alcohol Abuse Program — Confidential Information — Use in Drunk Driving Prosecution or Arrest: Concerned that Magnuson was intoxicated, Kee attempted to keep him from driving away from the Kee ranch and, when the attempt failed, called the local Alcoholics Anonymous and talked of her fears to House, not knowing that Magnuson was in counseling with House under a federally funded program. Federal law provides that patients' records are confidential and that information received while performing any alcohol abuse prevention function cannot be used to initiate or substantiate any criminal prosecution. House called an undersheriff and told him Magnuson was intoxicated, was driving a Ford Bronco, that Tracy's Bar was his usual hangout, and that the undersheriff should watch out for Magnuson. While driving around, the undersheriff saw Magnuson driving erratically. When stopped, Magnuson smelled of alcohol, appeared drunk, and failed onsite sobriety tests. The information House gave the undersheriff was not tainted with the federal prohibition, and dismissal of a DUI charge on the grounds of taint would be reversed. House was not performing an alcohol abuse prevention function when he received the information from Kee, and thus the information he gave the undersheriff was not federally prohibited confidential records information. In addition, the information the undersheriff received from House was not used to initiate or substantiate any charge; the undersheriff's own observations were. St. v. Magnuson, 210 M 401, 682 P2d 1365, 41 St. Rep. 1121 (1984) (decided under former 50-16-311, which was repealed by sec. 31, Ch. 632, L. 1987).

Attorney General's Opinions

Required Report of Transportation of Patient With Transmittable Infectious Disease Not in Conflict With Uniform Health Care Information Act: This section contains a statutory exception for disclosure of health care information as otherwise specifically provided by law. Therefore, the disclosure required under 50-16-702 and 50-16-703 when a patient transported to a health care facility is diagnosed with a transmittable infectious disease is not in conflict with the general provision of the Uniform Health Care Information Act that health care information may not be disclosed without the patient's written authorization. 45 A.G. Op. 31 (1994).

50-16-526. Patient authorization to health care provider for disclosure.

Official Comments

This section provides the mechanism by which a patient may authorize the disclosure of health-care information. It is important to note that all of a patient's rights under this section, and indeed under this Act, can be exercised by a person authorized to act on behalf of the patient under Article 6 [50-16-521 or 50-16-522]. Under subsection (a) [subsection (1) of this section], the recipient of such an authorization must honor the patient's request.

Subsection (b) [subsection (2) of this section] provides that the person making a disclosure pursuant to an authorization may charge the person seeking the record a reasonable fee, not to exceed actual cost, for providing copies of documents. Thus, the provider would be able to recover a reasonable fee for providing copies or actual expenses, whichever is less. This formulation will ensure that the reasonable costs of photocopying will be recovered, but that the patient will not be charged for a pro-rata share of overhead or professional salaries.

To be valid, an authorization must meet the criteria set forth in subsection (c) [subsection (3) of this section].

A patient should have wide latitude in executing an authorization form. It can be very specific (e.g., "x-rays of my broken leg, disclosed by ABC Hospital to EKG Insurance Company") or very general (e.g., "all my health-care information to any life insurance company"), depending on the patient's wishes.

A patient will often have a right to privacy or confidentiality, pursuant to the physician-patient privilege, under other statutory or common law. Common law rights may arise under either tort law or a theory of implied contract. Subsection (d) [subsection (4) of this section] provides that the signing of an authorization under this law does not, by itself, constitute a waiver of any of these privileges or rights.

50-16-527. Patient authorization — retention — effective period — exception — communication without prior notice for workers' compensation purposes.

Official Comments

Subsection (e) [subsection (1) of this section] requires health-care providers to maintain authorizations in conjunction with the patient's health-care information.

Subsection (f) [subsection (2) of this section] limits authorizations to information that already exists or will exist within six months, and prohibits general releases for any information that may be thereafter created. However, an exception is made for authorizations given to third-party payors, including insurance companies and employers who are self-insurers, in order to avoid disrupting and delaying patient reimbursements. It should be noted that Article VI [50-16-521 and 50-16-522] provides for a similar exception where under state law, a second individual is authorized to "stand in the shoes" of a patient who may be incompetent or who has provided a general power of attorney; in such cases no purpose would be served by requiring the guardian or attorney to constantly return to the patient to seek information.

Subsection (g) [subsection (3) of this section] provides a "grandfather" clause for authorizations in effect prior to the passage of this Act. It could create needless confusion to simply nullify those authorizations even though they do not meet the technical requirements of Section 2-102 [50-16-526]. Therefore, any authorization in effect prior to the passage of this Act will remain in effect for a period of 30 months unless an earlier date is specified or the patient elects to revoke the authorization by written notice pursuant to Section 2-103 [50-16-528]. Except for the technical requirements of the authorization, health-care information created prior to the effective date of this Act is fully subject to its requirements.

The subsection also provides for a 30-month cap on the length of authorizations signed after the effective date of the Act, although the patient would of course be free to specify a shorter period. The Privacy Protection Study Commission recommended a one-year authorization period; however, it was felt that such a short limit could create logistical problems for patients and providers without an accompanying increase in patient protection. The 30-month period was chosen to permit life insurers access to patient records, pursuant to a disclosure authorization, during the two-year contestibility period found in most life insurance policies, and to provide them with a short grace period thereafter to initiate legal action.

The time limits in subsections (f) and (g) [subsection (2) and (3) of this section] must be read together to determine the validity of a particular authorization. For 30 months after an authorization is signed, the holder may obtain access to any records in existence on the date the authorization was signed, or which were created within six months thereafter. Health-care information created more than six months after an authorization is signed cannot be obtained without a new authorization.

Case Notes

Workers' Compensation Court Authorized to Issue Only Limited Declaratory Judgments: Several workers filed claims in the Workers' Compensation Court seeking benefits. In a separate action, the workers filed a petition for a declaratory judgment in the Workers' Compensation Court seeking a declaration that the claimant disclosure waiver procedures in 39-71-604(3) and subsection (5) of this section violated the workers' right to privacy and deprived them of property without due process. The Workers' Compensation Court granted summary judgment for the workers and declared the statutory provisions unconstitutional. On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed. The Workers' Compensation Court erred in concluding that it had jurisdiction to enter a declaratory judgment in the context of this case. As a court of limited jurisdiction, the Workers' Compensation Court is statutorily authorized to issue declaratory rulings only in the context of a dispute concerning benefits under the Workers' Compensation Act and only as to the applicability of any statutory provision, rule, or order of an agency to that dispute. Benefits were not at issue in this case, so the Workers' Compensation Court did not have jurisdiction to issue a declaratory judgment concerning the constitutionality of 39-71-604(3) and subsection (5) of this section, nor is the Workers' Compensation Court a court of record because it does not appear in the list in 3-1-102. (Note that the Legislature added the Workers' Compensation Court to the list of courts of record effective October 1, 2007.) Thompson v. St., 2007 MT 185, 338 M 511, 167 P3d 867 (2007).

50-16-528. Patient's revocation of authorization for disclosure.

Official Comments

A patient may, as a general rule, revoke any prior disclosure authorization. The form of revocation and the effective date of any revocation is left to existing state law. There is an exception to this rule when health care has been provided or other action taken in reliance on a prior authorization.

In this context, "action" means substantial or significant action and not trivial or incidental action. This limitation might be operative, for example, when a claim under a life insurance policy is made or when a patient on public assistance has signed an authorization permitting disclosure of information to the state Medicaid authority that will pay for the treatment. It would be inequitable to permit the patient to revoke the authorization upon completion of treatment but prior to submission of the claim by the hospital.

When a health-care provider maintaining a patient's records is presented with an authorization form by an insurance company or other party, it generally has no independent means of determining whether the authorization has been revoked. A health-care provider who relies in good faith on an authorization that conforms on its face to the requirements of this Act is not liable under this Act for improper disclosure that arises from that reliance.

50-16-529. Disclosure without patient's authorization based on need to know.

Official Comments

Subsection (a) [this section] enumerates certain circumstances under which disclosure can be made without patient consent. Disclosure under this subsection is on a need-to-know basis only.

Paragraph (a)(1) [subsection (1) of this section] permits consultation within a health-care facility and with other health-care providers who are currently treating a patient. Such disclosures are often necessary to permit proper treatment and are of course limited by the general "need-to-know" restriction.

Paragraph (a)(2) [subsection (2) of this section] allows disclosure to persons who are not themselves health-care providers for planning, financial, administrative, or legal purposes. Thus billing services, outside laboratories, independent x-ray facilities, and other outside persons performing functions on behalf of the health-care facility can obtain records without patient authorization. Under this subsection records might be used by or disclosed to staff doctors, research fellows, student doctors and nurses, hospital accountants, and the hospital legal staff. Similarly, records would also be available to an attorney or insurance company acting on behalf of a health-care facility. Although subject to the need-to-know limitation, this paragraph adds restrictions on use and redisclosure of records by nonemployees performing services for a facility. Health-care providers must be satisfied that recipients have agreed to refrain from using the information for any purpose other than for the reason it was disclosed, and to take appropriate steps to protect its confidentiality. Thus, this provision, like other provisions in this Act which authorize nonconsensual disclosures, imposes restrictions on redisclosure. Such restrictions are appropriate and conceptually consistent with other provisions in the Act in that when disclosure is authorized by the patient the Act leaves the question of redisclosure to be worked out by the patient and the recipient or by other law. However, when the disclosure is not authorized by a patient, limits on redisclosure are appropriate because the patient does not have a basis for imposing redisclosure limitations on the recipient.

Paragraph (a)(3) [subsection (3) of this section] permits a health-care provider to consult with other health-care providers who have previously treated the patient. Under this provision, for example, a specialist might consult with the patient's general practitioner to help establish a diagnosis or recommended course of treatment. The patient is given the option of prohibiting such disclosures.

Paragraph (a)(4) [not adopted in Montana] permits a health-care provider to disclose information from a patient's record where the health-care provider has reason to believe that disclosure will avoid or minimize imminent danger to the health or safety of the patient or any other individual. Once it is apparent that an individual's health or safety is in imminent jeopardy, privacy concerns can become secondary. In some instances, such as after a serious accident, a patient may be unconscious and unable to consent to the release of information. This subsection would thus permit disclosure to a physician for purposes of emergency treatment. In other cases, such as where the patient is threatening the lives of hostages, the patient will obviously refuse to authorize disclosure. In such cases, immediate access to health-record information by appropriate personnel may be vital. For example, if a psychotic patient tells a physician he will kill another person as soon as he leaves the offices of the physician, that physician should disclose this threat of imminent danger to the threatened person or to the authorities. See Tarasoff v. Regents of the University of California, 17 Cal.3d 425, 551 P.2d 334, 131 Cal.Rptr. 14 (1976) (physician has duty to exercise reasonable care to protect third persons who may be injured by a patient's actions; thus physician may be liable for failure to warn victim of patient's violent threats).

Paragraph (a)(5) [subsection (4) of this section] permits a disclosure in those instances where it is generally assumed, and not formally required, to immediate family. For example, if a patient is in a coma or is in intensive care after surgery, generally the patient's family is informed of the patient's condition, even if an authorization was not completed beforehand.

There are two restrictions on such disclosures. First, they must be in accordance with good health-care practices. This means that the patient's health-care provider must believe that such a disclosure is appropriate under the circumstances of each individual case. Secondly, the patient may prohibit any disclosure by so informing the health-care provider.

Even where a relative objects to disclosure to another relative, the person seeking information still has the option of going to court to seek release under Section 2-105(a)(9) [50-16-535(9)]. This might be necessary, for example, if a mother denies her daughter access to records concerning the mother's use of DES or other drugs that could affect descendants.

Paragraph (a)(6) [subsection (5) of this section] is intended to deal with those situations in which a health-care facility or health-care practice is sold. Such sales normally include a transfer of existing patient files. This practice would be permitted to continue, without the need to obtain consent from each individual patient.

Paragraph (a)(7) [subsection (6) of this section] permits disclosure to health researchers provided that the research project has first been reviewed and approved by an institutional review board (IRB). IRB's established pursuant to Section 474 of the Public Health Service Act or other federal or state law already review all medical research subject to FDA approval to determine, inter alia, whether patient confidentiality has been sufficiently protected. See 21 C.F.R. §56.111(7). This Act extends the concept of the IRB to all medical research utilizing individually identifiable health-record information and instructs the review board to make a number of determinations before it can approve the release of identifiable health-record information to a researcher. This requires a decision that the research is sufficiently important to outweigh the patient's privacy interests; is impractical to conduct without health-record information in individually identifiable form; and that the research plan contains adequate safeguards to protect against disclosure of patient identities and other unauthorized redisclosure. While paragraph (a)(7)(v) [subsection (6)(e) of this section] permits a researcher to retain health-record information indefinitely if there is a need to do so, it is intended that the researcher discuss the need to retain individually identifiable information with the IRB before undertaking the project.

Recognizing the importance of medical research to society, the subsection authorizes researchers to redisclose health-record information under certain carefully circumscribed conditions. For example, this provision will permit routine disclosure of health-record information to "registries" established to monitor various diseases such as cancer. Before any such disclosure can be made, however, the registry, like any other research project, would have to be reviewed by an institutional review board. Registries, which in large measure exist to provide a database for other research, would also be able to redisclose health-record information, provided that the redisclosure is first approved by an institutional review board.

There are many other situations in which redisclosure of health-record information to other researchers may be necessary. For example, when results of a medical study are published and then reviewed by other researchers and scholars, questions about the conduct of the research or adequacy of the data may arise. If the data may not be redisclosed, there may be no way to verify its accuracy. Further, some studies require that medical records be checked many years after treatment. In a recent example, the link between vaginal cancer and the drug DES was established only after researchers were able to check the records of the victims' mothers, and learned that the mothers had taken DES 20 years before. Indeed, the term "research project" should be broadly construed, and may encompass a series of linked projects. The need to retain information or redisclose it, and the adequacy of the security safeguards should be determined by the IRB on a case-by-case basis.

At the same time, this subparagraph [subsection (6) of this section] prevents researchers from becoming information resources for law enforcement personnel or for others who might be curious about such data. Health-care providers and patients must be confident that information supplied to researchers will not be used to make decisions directly affecting patients. Thus, the Act permits redisclosure only to other researchers in conformity with a researcher's plan approved by an appropriate institutional review board.

Paragraph (a)(8) [subsection (7) of this section] is intended to strike a balance between the individual's right of privacy and society's interest in controlling and managing health-care programs, including third-party payment programs. It permits disclosure for purposes of an audit, provided that the auditor not publicly release patient-identifiable information, unless it is essential to do so and, in any event, removes or destroys such information from any copies of the original material that are retained by the auditor at the earliest opportunity consistent with the purposes of the audit.

Paragraph (a)(9) [subsection (8) of this section] permits a health-care provider to release patient records to a prison or other custodial facility while an individual is in custody, regardless of whether the health care was provided by the custodial facility or any other health-care facility. Once an individual is released from custody, the individual will have all of the rights accorded by this Act, regardless of whether the records were compiled while the individual was in custody.

Attorney General's Opinions

Conditions for Release of Information About HIV Test Subject — Imminent Danger to Health or Safety: In reconciling the apparent conflict in the provision of medical information as contained in the Uniform Health Care Information Act and the AIDS Prevention Act, the Attorney General determined that a health care provider may release health care information about the subject of an HIV-related test, including the identity of the subject, to a contact, as defined in 50-16-1003, without the subject's authorization, only when the health care provider reasonably believes that disclosure will avoid or minimize an imminent danger to the health or safety of the contact or other individual. 44 A.G. Op. 37 (1992).

50-16-530. Disclosure without patient's authorization.

Official Comments

Subsection (b) [this section] also permits certain disclosures without patient consent. However, it recognizes that there are certain situations in which disclosures should be made without the "need-to-know" restriction of subsection (a) [50-16-529], either because that restriction is impractical or because disclosure is legally mandated.

Paragraph (b)(1) [subsection (1) of this section] provides that the health-care provider may release directory information without a patient's express consent. Directory information is limited to the name and general medical status (e.g., good, fair, stable, poor, or critical condition) of a patient currently receiving treatment on an in-patient or emergency bases. As is the case with disclosure to family members under paragraph (a)(5) [50-16-529(4)], the patient may object to the release of such information, in which case the information cannot be released. Additionally, as with all paragraphs in this section [50-16-529 and this section], the Act does not require a health-care facility to release any information; it merely permits it to do so. Thus, if a psychiatric hospital has a policy of refusing to release directory information, this Act does not require it to change that policy.

Paragraphs (b)(2) and (b)(3) [subsections (2) and (3) of this section] recognize that many states have adopted statutes or regulations that require the reporting of particular kinds of health-care information to public health or law enforcement authorities. See, e.g., Cal.Lab.Code §6409 (West 1979) (physician reporting of occupational injuries and illnesses); Ark.Stat.Ann. §42-615 (1979) (reporting deaths from violence or unusual circumstances); Mass.Gen.Laws Ann. ch. 111, §191 (West 1979) (reporting of lead poisoning cases). In some instances, for example, health-care providers are required to report information about individuals with highly communicable diseases, such as diphtheria, so that appropriate countermeasures can be taken. See, Ala.Code §22-11-2 (1979); Ariz.Rev.Stat.Ann. §36-623 (1979); N.J.Stat.Ann. §§26:4-15, 26:4-19 (West 1979). Such disclosures not always have to be made in individually identifiable form. However, laws vary from state to state, and many such laws require disclosure of individually identifiable information. Similarly, a number of states require that health-care providers report conditions such as gunshot or knife wounds or child abuse. See Ind.Code Ann. §35-23-11-1 (Burns 1979); Mich.Comp.Laws §750.411 (1970); Va.Code §54-276.10 (1979); Colo.Rev.Stat. §19-10-104 (1979); Ohio Rev.Code Ann. §2151.421 (Page 1979); Wis.Stat.Ann. §48.981 (West 1979). This provision recognizes these statutes which often also restrict redisclosure.

Only the information necessary to meet the needs of the compulsory reporting statute should be released. See Minnesota v. Andring, 52 U.S.L.W. 2425 (Minn. Feb. 7, 1984) (state child abuse reporting law does not totally abrogate the physician-patient privilege). It should be noted that, even though this subsection is narrowly drafted, paragraph (a)(4) [of section 2-104, not adopted in Montana] permits complete disclosure to law enforcement personnel in emergency situations. Recognizing that society has a larger interest in rapid investigation of public health problems, such as Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome (AIDS), paragraph (b)(2) [subsection (2) of this section] dealing with public-health investigations is more permissively drafted, permitting disclosure where authorized by law. This section does not require specific statutory authority for a specific piece of information; it is enough if a public-health agency has general statutory authority to request information, and believes it has a need for the information it is requesting.

Paragraph (b)(4) [subsection (5) of this section] permits disclosure of health-care information pursuant to compulsory process in those situations where compulsory process is permitted under Section 2-105 [50-16-535 or 50-16-536].

50-16-535. When health care information available by compulsory process.

Official Comments

Many of the protections contained in this Act would be of little value if government agencies or others were free to obtain health-care information from health-care providers through the unconditional use of compulsory process or discovery. A hospital or other health-care provider faced with a subpoena, search warrant, or discovery request is now generally required to turn over sensitive health-record information about a patient before the patient who is the subject of the record even knows the information has been requested. See Gellman, supra, at 287-292; Note, Privacy in Personal Medical Information: A Diagnosis, U.Fla.L.Rev. 394, 396-400 (1981). And, under current law in most jurisdictions, since the patient does not have possession of the documents sought through compulsory process or discovery, there is little he can do to contest their release, even when he does have knowledge. Cf. United States v. Miller, 425 U.S. 435 (1976) (customer has no right to challenge subpoena issued to a financial institution to produce the customer's records, which were in the possession of the financial institution).

There are several different ways that this problem can be addressed. The traditional physician-patient privilege, which exists in some form in nearly every state, precludes testimony by a health-care provider about a patient's health-care information. See Gellman, supra, at 272-274. The privilege does not, however, shield health-care information from disclosure pursuant to legal process, and the recipient is free to use information so obtained to pursue investigatory leads. See, e.g., Idaho Code §9-203 (1982) (physician-patient privilege applies only where physician is subject to examination as a witness in litigation). Thus, the privilege, while it does protect a patient from some potential adverse consequences, does little to protect a patient's privacy interests.

The Federal Right to Financial Privacy Act attempted to address this problem for bank records by requiring the notification of the subject of records sought through compulsory process before his or her records were released. See 12 U.S.C. §§3401-3422 (1982). The subject was then given the right to go to court to bring an action to block release of the records. This approach has not worked well in practice. Few individuals have the knowledge or resources necessary to pursue a legal action, and, if adopted here, it would place a considerable burden on the patient. Further, such actions could potentially clog the courts and are cumbersome, requiring a number of expedited procedures and exceptions.

Section 2-105 [50-16-536 and this section] embodies a different approach, which has already been adopted by some states. See, e.g., Cal.Evid.Code §994 (West 1980); Mont.Code Ann. §50-16-314 (1980) [repealed 1987]; R.I.Gen.Laws §5-37.3-6 (1980). Under this section, production of health-care information could not be compelled in any type of proceeding. It thus extends a physician-patient type privilege to encompass investigations and discovery. In a few states, this Act would create, for the first time, a comprehensive physician-patient type privilege. The general prohibition on the use of compulsory process or discovery in investigatory proceedings represents a major change in policy, modifying long-standing state privilege rules.

This general restriction on compulsory process and discovery does not apply where one of the exceptions contained in subsection (a) [this section] apply. Subsection (a) [this section] authorizes the use of discovery and compulsory process in nine specified situations. These situations generally include cases where a patient has consented to release of information, litigation, such as malpractice cases, where the patient is a party to a lawsuit, litigation involving a will or a deceased patient, health-care information obtained pursuant to a court-ordered examination, health-care fraud investigations, or pursuant to court order in cases where the interest in access outweighs the patient's privacy interest. In such cases, a patient may assert any of the usual procedural rules or defenses that existed prior to the passage of this Act. Nothing in this Act is intended to reduce current patient rights or to provide any new grant of subpoena authority.

It is important to note that this section in no way supersedes or modifies a state's rules of evidence. While the section does provide a new threshold test that must be met before health-care information is subject to discovery or subpoena, that test is an easier one to meet than the requirements of the rules of evidence. Thus, once health-care information has been discovered under this section, the normal rules of evidence govern its use at trial. There should be no situation in which health-care information would be admissible at trial, but shielded from discovery by this section; on the other hand, it may often be the case that discoverable health-care information will prove inadmissible at trial.

Subsection (a)(2) [subsection (2) of this section] is intended to permit discovery or compulsory process where the patient has waived confidentiality. It would make little sense, for example, to protect a patient's records from compulsory process where the patient has already granted a newspaper interview about his health condition.

Subsection (a)(3) [subsection (3) of this section] permits the use of a patient's health-care information where the patient is a party to a lawsuit and has placed his health at issue. This section should be narrowly interpreted, however. If a patient has placed his physical condition at issue, there should not be automatic access to his mental-health records. Where broader access is desired, or where the patient is a witness or a party that has not placed his health information at issue, the party seeking access must proceed under subsection (a)(9) [subsection (9) of this section], which permits a patient to raise his privacy interests.

Subsection (a)(4) [subsection (4) of this section] allows for patient records to be used where mental or physical condition is relevant to execution or witnessing of a will. In litigation over testamentary capacity, for example, the best evidence of whether the testator had a "sound mind" may be the testator's medical record at the time of execution of the will. Subsection (b)(4) [evidently a reference to subsection (a)(4) since there never was a subsection (b)(4)] allows compulsory process as to that evidence. See Mont.Code Ann. §50-16-314(2)(a) (1980) (adopting the same exception to a general ban on compulsory process or discovery of health-care information) [repealed 1987].

Subsection (a)(6) [subsection (6) of this section] allows disclosure of relevant health-care information in civil or criminal commitment proceedings. The purpose of such a proceeding is for the court to assess a patient's health to determine whether that patient is in need of treatment. Without access to the patient's health-care record, a commitment proceeding would be meaningless. See R.I.Gen.Laws §5.37.3-6(2)(B) (1980).

Subsection (a)(7) [subsection (7) of this section] recognizes that patient records are often the only evidence available to investigate and prosecute health-care providers or researchers who may have violated the law. A privacy statute intended to protect patients must not shield illegal behavior by providers. Therefore, this subjection [sic] permits the use of compulsory process or discovery to obtain information as part of an investigation or proceeding in which a health-care provider is suspected of a violation of law, is a defendant, or is otherwise a party. However, no information obtained under this section can be used in an investigation of, or action against, a patient, unless the action or investigation directly relates to payment by third-party payors for a patient's health care. However, this section does not prohibit use of information obtained by law enforcement personnel that, coincidentally, was also obtained independently under this subsection.

Subsection (a)(9) [subsection (9) of this section] permits the use of compulsory process or discovery to obtain health-care information where the party seeking access establishes, in an individual case, that its interests outweigh the privacy interests of the patient involved. This section, with its balancing test, should be used wherever patient health-care information is sought to challenge the competency or credibility of a witness, or a party who has not placed his health-care information at issue.

This test is also applicable to a case where the subject of information receives notice that his or her records are being sought and has the opportunity to contest access. For example, if the court is convinced that society's interests are greater than the patient's privacy interest, government officials would be permitted to use process to force production of records where there has been a felony committed, but the victim is reluctant or afraid to testify, for example in rape or child abuse cases.

This subsection will also permit the use of ex parte or in camera proceedings to obtain a patient's health-care information. Such proceedings should be rarely used, but might be necessary, for example, where a prosecutor is seeking a search warrant and does not want the patient to know.

Case Notes

Confidentiality of Patients' Health Care Information — Costs of Producing Copies of Nonconfidential Information to Be Borne by Health Care Providers: In a class action suit seeking monetary damages for excessive fees allegedly charged for copies of patient medical records, the District Court concluded that patient names were not confidential and ordered that the health care providers produce the names and bear the cost of producing the information as to requests for copies. The Supreme Court held that names of medical patients are protected under constitutional and statutory law and vacated the portion of the order requiring the production of patients' names, noting that patient notification would have to be accomplished through other means, such as an opt-in notification. The order was affirmed to the extent that names of nonpatient requesters, such as attorneys and insurance companies whose privacy was not at issue, be provided. Further, because 50-16-525 requires health care providers to maintain patient records for 3 years, the District Court did not abuse it discretion in ordering the providers to bear the cost of producing the information. St. James Community Hosp., Inc. v. District Court, 2003 MT 261, 317 M 419, 77 P3d 534 (2003).

Investigative Subpoena for Medical Records Not Issued for Overly Broad Time Period: The District Court issued an investigative subpoena related to an accident on January 3, 2000, to compel production of Bilant's medical records back to 1996. The affidavit for subpoena was issued May 10, 2000. The health care provider supplied records back to 1991. Bilant moved to suppress the information on grounds that the subpoena was overly broad in supplying any information after the date of the accident and prior to the date specified in the subpoena. The Supreme Court affirmed the validity of the investigative subpoena. The inclusion of time between January 3 and May 10 did not render the subpoena defective because there was a legitimate nexus between prescriptions issued before January 3 and prescription refills issued during subsequent months. Further, if a health care provider discloses medical information beyond what is allowed by law, the remedy lies with the health care provider and not with law enforcement through a motion to suppress. The question of the production of medical records beyond those required by the subpoena was a matter beyond the scope of Supreme Court review, and receipt by the state of records that contained information outside the scope and time period requested did not justify suppression of those portions of the records sought by and yielded pursuant to an otherwise legally sufficient investigative subpoena. St. v. Bilant, 2001 MT 249, 307 M 113, 36 P3d 883 (2001).

Revealing Limited Medical Information During Police Interview Not Considered Waiver of Constitutional Right to Confidentiality in Medical Records — Voluntary Medical Information Outside Scope of Fruit of Poisonous Tree Doctrine — Adequate Probable Cause for Investigative Subpoena of Medical Records: Bilant was involved in a three-car accident and was subsequently arrested for DUI and a seat belt violation. During an interview following the arrest, Bilant revealed to an officer that he had taken pain medication on the day of the accident. The officer called Bilant's health care provider for confirmation, and the provider confirmed that Bilant had a prescription for a drug similar to the pain medication that he mentioned. The officer then procured an investigative subpoena regarding documentation on all prescriptions issued to Bilant, including any advisory warnings, and the provider sent Bilant's entire medical file. Bilant contended that the state violated both his constitutional right to privacy and the statutory protections of this section. The state maintained that Bilant waived his claim of confidentiality in his medical information when he voluntarily revealed his use of pain medication to the officer. The Supreme Court agreed with Bilant. Medical records are quintessentially private and deserve the utmost constitutional protection. None of the statutory prerequisites for disclosure of the medical records were met. In deciding to reveal limited medical information in a police interview, Bilant did not forfeit his constitutional right to subsequently claim confidentiality in his medical records. The officer conducted an illegal search in seeking the constitutionally protected private medical information without probable cause and the benefit of an investigative subpoena under 46-4-301, and the information gleaned from the telephone call should have been suppressed. Bilant then contended that the use of the illegally obtained information formed an improper basis for the investigative subpoena and that the results of the subpoena should also have been suppressed pursuant to the fruit of the poisonous tree doctrine, which forbids the use of evidence that comes to light as the result of an initially illegal act. However, on this point, the Supreme Court disagreed with Bilant. One exception to the doctrine is that the derivative evidence is admissible if it is obtained from an independent source. Here, Bilant himself provided the source by giving voluntary medical information from other than the illegal telephone inquiry. The Supreme Court recognized that an investigative subpoena seeking constitutionally protected medical information requires greater justification for state access than the administration of justice rationale used to obtain public information under 46-4-301, so in reviewing the probable cause basis for constitutionally protected material, the court excised the illegal evidence from the application and reviewed the remaining information de novo to determine whether probable cause existed for issuing the subpoena. In this case, even when the information subject to suppression was excised, the remaining evidence established probable cause that a DUI was committed and underscored a compelling state interest in medical records related to prescription medicines in order to confirm Bilant's initial admission to the officer. Thus, the subpoena was issued in accordance with the statutory requirements for constitutionally protected medical records, and Bilant's conviction was affirmed. St. v. Bilant, 2001 MT 249, 307 M 113, 36 P3d 883 (2001). See also St. v. New, 276 M 529, 917 P2d 919 (1996), and St. v. Nelson, 283 M 231, 941 P2d 441 (1997).

Discovery Exception Inapplicable — Blood Sample Admissible Under Other Law: After Henning's motion in limine for suppression of a voluntarily given blood sample was denied, he entered a plea of DUI upon the condition that the plea could be withdrawn if the District Court ruled his blood sample inadmissible. The District Court found that the state had a compelling state interest that outweighed Henning's privacy interest under 50-16-535. The Supreme Court held that subsection (1)(i) of this section is inapplicable because it applies only to discovery of health care information, and Henning did not contend that his blood test was not subject to discovery. The Supreme Court found the results of the test admissible under 61-8-404(1)(a) and admissible under the rationale of St. v. Kirkaldie, 179 M 283, 587 P2d 1298 (1978). St. v. Henning, 258 M 488, 853 P2d 1223, 50 St. Rep. 626 (1993), distinguished in St. v. Nelson, 283 M 231, 941 P2d 441, 54 St. Rep. 576 (1997).

DECISIONS UNDER FORMER LAW

Inspection of Medical and Youth Court Records Denied — No Prejudice: The defendant, convicted of sexual intercourse without consent, contended that the District Court's refusal to furnish him the minor victim's hospital and Youth Court records for use on cross-examination prejudiced his right to "be confronted with the witnesses against him" under the sixth amendment to the U.S. Constitution (similar to Art. II, sec. 24, Mont. Const.). The Supreme Court held that 50-16-314 (repealed, sec. 31, Ch. 632, L. 1987) and 53-24-306 (amended, sec. 29, Ch. 632, L. 1987) exempt confidential health care information from compulsory legal process. In St. v. Camitsch, 192 M 124, 626 P2d 1250, 38 St. Rep. 563 (1981), the Supreme Court "confine[d] the permissible use of . . . juvenile records to demonstrating, by cross-examination, a witness' bias, prejudice, or motive". The defendant in this case failed to show how use of the records could have demonstrated this or how he could have built a defense based on their use. He had adequate opportunity to cross-examine the victim in an effort to damage her credibility. The Supreme Court ruled that the confrontation clause does not require that a criminal defendant be allowed to impeach the credibility of a victim by compromising the confidentiality of medical treatment or Youth Court records; therefore, the defendant's sixth amendment right was not infringed. St. v. Mendenhall, 219 M 328, 721 P2d 1255, 42 St. Rep. 2060 (1985).

provider to release confidential health care information. 38 A.G. Op. 82 (1980). (Opinion issued under former 50-16-314, which was repealed by sec. 31, Ch. 632, L. 1987.)

50-16-536. Method of compulsory process.

Official Comments

Subsection (b) [subsection (1) of this section] provides that a person seeking compulsory process for discovery purposes under subsections (a)(3), (4), (5) [50-16-535 (3) through (5)], or in a civil action under (a)(9) [50-16-535(9)] must notify the patient by first-class mail. Obviously, this requirement will also be satisfied by personal service. In the case of access under the other paragraphs of subsection (a) [50-16-535(1), (2), (6) through (8)], the patient will either know, or should not be told, that his records are being sought, and no notice is necessary.

Subsection (c) [subsection (2) of this section] provides that the use of compulsory process or discovery must be accompanied by a written certification, signed by the person seeking to enforce such process or that person's representative, identifying the specific paragraph of subsection (a) [subsection of 50-16-535] under which compulsory process or discovery is being sought. The person making the certification must have a reasonable basis for believing that the paragraph of subsection (a) [subsection of 50-16-535] relied upon is applicable. A copy of the certification must be made a permanent part of the patient's health-care information.

Subsection (d) [subsection (3) of this section] is included to make clear that nothing in the Act is intended to waive any rights that any person might have under existing state law or procedural rules to challenge the disclosure of health-care information through compulsory process or discovery, or its admissibility into evidence. By the same token, nothing in the Act should be construed so as to restore any privilege or right that has otherwise been waived.

Official Comments

In recent years a consensus has emerged that patients should be allowed to inspect their health-care information. In 1945 Massachusetts became the first state to adopt a statute giving patients a right to see their health-care information. Mass.Gen.Laws, ch. 111 §70. By the early 1980's the number of states which had adopted patient access statutes had grown to approximately 25. Auerbach & Boque, Medical Records: Getting Yours, Public Citizen Health Research Group (1980). That number continues to increase due, in some measure, to a recommendation by the Privacy Protection Study Commission in 1977 that states adopt patient access statutes. Privacy Commission Report at 295.

The consensus supporting patient access to health-care information is also illustrated in the federal Privacy Act, 5 U.S.C. §552a, which gives patients in federal health-care facilities a right of access to their health-care information, subject to certain limitations.

In addition to statutory patient access requirements, medical licensing boards in several states have adopted rules which require physicians to allow patients to inspect or copy their records in at least most circumstances. Moreover, courts in a number of states have held, even in the absence of a statute, that patients have a common-law right of access to their health-care information. In Hutchings v. Texas Rehabilitation Commission, 544 S.W.2d 802 (Tex.1976), for example, a former patient sought to compel the Texas Rehabilitation Commission to provide him with access to his medical records. The court held that patients in Texas have a common-law right to inspect their health records. (For other cases holding that patients have a right of access to their records, see National Commission on the Confidentiality of Health Records, Judicial Decisions in Health Record Confidentiality, at 6 (1979).

In recent years, health-care organizations have joined the chorus of those who support patient access to health-care information. The American Hospital Association and most other major health associations are now on record as supporting patient access. See American Hospital Association, A Patient's Bill of Rights (1972).

There are several reasons for the emergence of a consensus supporting patient access. There is the recognition that patient health-care information is widely shared with parties outside of the health community. Accordingly, basic fairness and patients' needs to assess the impact of such sharing demands that patients be given access to their records.

Other reasons often cited in support of patient access include its positive effect on patients' trust in health-care providers; its positive effect on patients' recovery; its positive effect on both the quality of care and the quality of recordkeeping; and the fact that patients, in one way or another, pay for the care and thus should be able to see records documenting the care. Kaiser, "Patients Rights of Access to Their Own Medical Records: The Need for New Law," 24 Buf.L.Rev. 317-30 (1975). For all of these reasons, this section gives patients a right, upon written request, to examine or copy their health-care information.

This section relies on the definition of the term "patient" as defined in Section 1-102 [50-16-504] and includes health-care representatives pursuant to Section 6-101 [50-16-521] and representatives of deceased patients pursuant to Section 6-102 [50-16-522]. Any reference to patients in this section refers to those persons authorized to act on behalf of patients under Sections 6-101 [50-16-521] and 6-102 [50-16-522]. However, where patients direct providers to disclose their health-care information to third parties the provisions of this section do not apply. Instead, the patient must proceed under the authorization procedures in Section 2-102 [50-16-526 and 50-16-527].

One of the continuing controversies concerning patient access to health-care information is whether patients should be entitled to obtain a copy of their record or merely be allowed to inspect the record. Subsection (a)(1) [subsection (1)(a) of this section] opts to give patients the right to obtain copies of their records, if requested. If patients are to have access, there does not seem to be any policy reason why patients should not enjoy the more complete and effective right to obtain a copy of their record.

Subsection (a) [subsection (1) of this section] also provides that when a health-care provider receives a written request from a patient to examine or copy the patient's health-care information the provider must, as promptly as possible, but in any event within 10 days after receiving the request, respond to the patient by making the record available, by denying access to the record on one of the grounds permitted by Section 3-102 [50-16-542], or by informing the patient that the record, for one of the reasons authorized by this section, cannot be provided to the patient or provided within the 10-day time period. The effect of this section is to ensure that patients will receive a timely and complete response to their access requests.

A second controversy which continues to simmer relates to whether access rights should apply exclusively to health-care information maintained by institutional health-care providers or should extend, as well, to health-care information maintained by physicians and other kinds of health-care professionals. Access statutes in just over a dozen states apply to health records maintained by providers other than institutions.

This section takes the view that a patient's interest in examining and obtaining a copy of health-care information is just as compelling when the information is maintained by a professional health-care provider as it is when the information is maintained by an institutional health-care provider. Accordingly, this section does not make a distinction between professional and institutional health-care providers. In so doing, this section is consistent with the approach taken throughout the Act.

However, Section 3-101 [this section] does contain several provisions that are designed to minimize the burden of complying with patient access requests.

In addition to the extension period permitted under subsection (a) [subsection (1) of this section], subsection (b) [subsection (2) of this section] includes two provisions designed to ease any burden for providers. First, the subsection provides that if the patient makes a request for the production of his records in a particular format, a health-care provider need not create a new record or reformulate an existing record in order to comply. Thus, if a patient seeks his record arranged by hospital, and instead his record is arranged chronologically, the provider is under no obligation to reformulate the record. Similarly, if the record is maintained on microfiche, the patient must accept the copy in that form. The provider's obligation is discharged if the provider provides the record in readable form.

Second, subsection (b) [subsection (2) of this section] gives providers a right to charge patients making examination and copying requests a reasonable fee not to exceed the health-care provider's actual cost for providing the requested information. Health-care providers may be reimbursed for reproduction costs and staff time for searching for, and otherwise producing, records. However, this formulation does not include indirect costs for general overhead. Moreover, providers must charge the lesser of a reasonable fee or their actual costs.

The provider may make this fee payable in advance and need not permit examination or copying until the fee is paid.

Compiler's Comments

1999 Amendment: Chapter 300 in (1)(a) after "examination" inserted "without charge"; in last sentence of (2) after "fee" inserted "for each request", substituted "the fee provided for in 50-16-540" for "the health care provider's actual cost", and near end substituted "provide copies" for "permit examination or copying"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective October 1, 1999.

Case Notes

Documents Dealing With Patient Care and Treatment Discoverable Under Hospital Peer Review Statutes — Data Protected From Disclosure: The net effect of the hospital peer review statutes is that health care information belongs to both the patient and the hospital, while data is a matter of an internal administrative function. To the extent that documents over which a hospital seeks protection are relevant to a patient's care and treatment, they are discoverable, but to the extent that documents are data in connection with the professional training, supervision, or discipline of the hospital medical staff, they are not discoverable. The right of confidentiality created under 50-16-205 is subject to the patient's right of access to records concerning that patient's own hospital care and treatment, consistent with the Uniform Health Care Information Act, which also provides that a personal representative of a deceased patient may exercise all the deceased patient's rights, including the right of the deceased's estate to examine or copy all of the deceased patient's health care information. Huether v. District Court, 2000 MT 158, 300 M 212, 4 P3d 1193, 57 St. Rep. 647 (2000), distinguishing Sistok v. Kalispell Regional Hosp., 251 M 38, 823 P2d 251 (1991), and overruling Sistok to the extent that that case may not be read to apply to a hospital patient seeking disclosure of information concerning that patient's care or treatment. (See 2001 amendments to 50-16-201, 50-16-203, and 50-16-205.)

50-16-542. Denial of examination and copying.

Official Comments

Undoubtedly, the sharpest continuing controversy about patient access to health-care information concerns whether a health-care provider should have a right to deny access to a patient if the provider believes that access would be injurious to the patient's health. This question is most sharply focused in instances where mental-health patients seek access to their records. In these circumstances, both the volitional quality of the patient's access request and the potential effect of the access on the patient is a matter of acute concern. Strassburger, "Problems Surrounding 'Informed Voluntary Consent' and Patient Access to Records," Psychiatric Opinion, 30 (Feb. 1975).

Most state patient access statutes do not apply to mental-health records. Those statutes which do apply usually limit the access right so that the provider maintaining the record can opt to give the record to a third party—often another physician of the patient's choosing. Medical Records: Getting Yours, at 32. In addition, most of the courts that have considered whether mental-health patients have a common-law or a statutory right of access to mental-health information have ruled in the negative. Gotkin v. Miller, 514 F.2d 125 (2d Cir. 1975); Bain v. Spencer, 393 F.2d 108 (1st Cir. 1968), cert. denied, 400 U.S. 866 (1970); Turner v. Reed, 538 P.2d 373 (Or. 1975).

There are instances when a patient's access to his own records should be limited, denied, or circumscribed. Consistent with the other provisions of this Act, these exceptions are set out in this section without distinction as to whether the records relate to mental or physical health, although they will be applicable most often as to mental-health patients.

Subsection 3-102(a) [subsection (1) of this section] identifies three circumstances when a health-care provider may deny a patient's request to examine or copy his own health-care information. The first is where the health-care provider concludes that patient examination would be injurious to his or her health.

The second, included primarily because of real concerns of the mental-health community, is to encourage third persons, primarily family and friends, to assist the mental-health professional with information helpful in treating the patient. Health-care providers occasionally need to be able to receive information about a patient on a confidential basis, and their confidential sources should be able to provide such information without fear of being identified by the patient.

Thus, if the health-care information could reasonably be expected to enable the patient to identify a person who has provided information to the health-care provider on a confidential basis, and with an expectation that it would be retained in confidence, then, under subsection (a)(2) [subsection (1)(b) of this section], the patient does not have a right to examine or copy that part of the health-care information.

If the provider determines that the examination or copying could reasonably be expected to cause danger to the life or safety of any person, subsection (a)(3) [subsection (1)(c) of this section] provides that a patient does not have the right to examine or copy that information. Reasonable expectation of danger is sufficient; this subsection does not adopt the imminent danger standard of Section 2-104(4) [50-16-529(4)].

Subsection (a)(4) [subsection (1)(d) of this section] permits a provider to withhold health-care information compiled and used solely for litigation purposes, administrative purposes, quality assurance, or peer review. For example, attorney-client communications and so-called "incident reports" needed for efficient operations of a medical facility are exempt from the subject access requirements. These reports are usually not retrievable by patient name. Moreover, these reports are not compiled for health-care purposes but, rather, to document unusual or significant events that affect a provider's future health-care operation or involve matters of administrative planning or legal exposure. If patients could use this Act to examine and copy such information, much of the health-care provider's quality control activities would be disrupted. Furthermore, since this information has not been compiled for health-care purposes the Act's interests would not be furthered by providing access rights.

If a health-care provider denies a request for examination and copying pursuant to subsection 3-102(a) [subsection (1) of this section], then under subsection 3-102(b) [subsection (3) of this section] the provider must identify the portions of the health-record information which are not covered by a provision authorizing withholding and must make that portion available for examination and copying. For example, the deletion could be of the confidential source and some or all of the information furnished by the source if it might identify him or her.

Finally, if a provider denies an access request on the grounds that access would be injurious to the patient's health or could be expected to cause danger to the life or safety of any person, then under subsection 3-102(c) [subsection (4) of this section], the provider must permit examination and copying by another health-care provider selected by the patient provided that this health-care provider is licensed, certified, or otherwise authorized under the laws of the state to treat the patient for the same condition as the original health-care provider. Further, the original health-care provider must inform the patient, in writing, of the patient's right to select another provider to exercise his examination and copying rights. The health-care provider selected by the patient is free to make the health-record information available to the patient. This formulation is relatively common, having been adopted in a number of state statutes, and, as well, by a number of agencies operating under the federal Privacy Act.

50-16-543. Request for correction or amendment.

Official Comments

This section gives a patient a right to submit, in writing, a written request to correct or amend the patient's health-care information to which the patient has access under Section 3-101 [50-16-541]. The purpose of the correction or amendment request must be to improve the accuracy or completeness of the record. The Uniform Information Practices Code permits individuals to request agencies to correct or amend incomplete or inaccurate information about them maintained in agency records. Furthermore, the Privacy Protection Study Commission recommended that state health-care record statutes give patients a right to correct or amend their records together with a right to examine and copy their records. Privacy Commission Report at 295. Indeed, one of the principal purposes of most subject access schemes is to permit a record subject to verify the accuracy and completeness of his record. Accordingly, most state statutes which give patients a right of access to their health-care records also give patients a right to correct or amend their records. The federal Privacy Act takes the same approach. Accurate health-care information is not only important to the delivery of health care, but for patient applications for life, disability and health insurance, employment, and a great many other issues that might be involved in civil litigation (e.g., Workmen's Compensation, child custody, personal injury).

Section 4-101(b) [subsection (2) of this section] parallels Section 3-101(a) [50-16-541(1)] in setting out conditions which apply to a provider's handling of a correction or amendment request. Under subsection (b) [subsection (2) of this section], the provider must respond to each request as promptly as possible and, in any event, within 10 days after receiving the request.

This subsection, like the parallel provision in Section 3-101 [50-16-541], gives the provider five possible options for response. The provider can respond by: (1) making the requested correction or amendment and so informing the patient and further informing the patient of the patient's right to have the correction or amendment disseminated to previous recipients of the uncorrected or unamended health-care information; or (2) if the record no longer exists or cannot be located, so informing the patient; or (3) if the health-care provider does not maintain the record, providing the patient with the name and address of the provider or person who it is believed does maintain the record, if known; or (4) in the event of unusual circumstances, or if the record is in use, so informing the patient and specifying a time, not to exceed 21 days from receipt of the request, when the record will be corrected or amended or the request otherwise disposed of; or (5) denying the correction or amendment request and so informing the patient, in writing, including the provider's reason for refusing the request and the patient's right to add a statement of disagreement and to have that statement disseminated to previous recipients of the disputed information.

50-16-544. Procedure for adding correction, amendment, or statement of disagreement.

Official Comments

Section 4-102 [this section] sets out the procedures that apply to adding corrections or amendments or patient statements of disagreement. Subsection (a)(1) [subsection (1)(a) of this section] provides that if a health-care provider accepts a proposed correction or amendment, the provider must add this information to the record and mark the corrected record or amended entries and indicate the place in the record where the corrected or amended information can be found, in whatever manner is practicable. The inaccurate or incomplete information should not be expunged but merely marked as inaccurate or incomplete. Where microfiche records are used, it may not be possible to mark old entries as inaccurate or incomplete and, in this circumstance, marking the cover page or adding a supplemental record may be the most practicable procedure and will satisfy the statutory standard.

Many state statutes or industry model codes permit patients to add a rebuttal statement when providers refuse to make a requested correction. Subsection (b) [subsection (2) of this section] provides that if a health-care provider denies a patient's correction or amendment request, the provider must permit the patient to file with his record a brief statement of the patient's reasons for believing that the record should be corrected or amended, and/or his reasons for disagreement with the provider's refusal. The rebuttal statement should be brief and to the point and, where practicable, the challenged entries should be so marked and the place in the record where the rebuttal statement can be found should be indicated. Section 4-102 [this section] is not intended to replace the judgments of health-care professionals who create the health-care information with the lay opinions of patients. However, if a patient disputes the accuracy or completeness of health-care information it is fair to permit the patient's view to be included in the record.

50-16-545. Dissemination of corrected or amended information or statement of disagreement.

Official Comments

Subsection (a) [subsection (1) of this section] requires a health-care provider who accepts a patient's correction or amendment, as well as a provider who has been required to add a patient statement to the record, to take all reasonable steps upon request by the patient to distribute the corrected information or the patient statement to all parties designated by the patient who have previously received the information which is the subject of the correction or amendment attempt. The distribution requirement is made dependent on a patient's request because some patients may not want to encourage the dissemination of the corrected or amended information or the patient's statement, because any reference to the matter, even an alleged accurate reference, may be damaging to the patient.

Subsection (b) [subsection (2) of this section] permits a health-care provider to charge patients the lesser of a reasonable fee or the provider's actual cost in distributing the corrected or amended information or the statement of disagreement if the correction or amendment was not caused by the provider's error. Actual cost of distribution includes reproduction and postage and staff time for distribution but does not include overhead, professional staff time, or any costs associated with the processing of the correction or amendment request.

It is expected that patients will use the disclosure record, which Section 2-101(b) [50-16-525(2)] of the Act requires providers to maintain, to identify persons who have previously received the information in question.

50-16-551. Criminal penalty.

Official Comments

Subsection (a) [not adopted in Montana] makes it a misdemeanor for a health-care provider to willfully disclose health-care information if the person knew, or should have known, that such disclosure is in violation of this Act. It is up to each state to set the terms of punishment for this crime. However, the section recommends a misdemeanor citation with a fine not to exceed $10,000 and a period of imprisonment not to exceed one year.

Subsection (b) [subsection (1) of this section] makes it a crime to willfully misrepresent one's identity or purpose (false pretenses) or to use bribery or theft to examine health-care information in violation of this Act. Access to an automated information system by willfully using a password or code to misrepresent one's identity or purpose would be covered by this subsection. So too would other types of related crimes such as wiretapping. The section recommends a penalty structure that is identical to the penalties for willful disclosure.

Subsection (c) [subsection (2) of this section] makes it a crime to willfully [purposely] provide a disclosure or authorization under Section 2-102 [50-16-526 or 50-16-527] a certification under Section 2-105(c) [50-16-536(2)] (compulsory disclosures) knowing that the certification is false or that the authorization is false. In order to come within this section an individual must know that the certification or authorization is false in a material respect and must willfully [purposely] present that certification or authorization to a health-care provider.

It is important to emphasize that the Act's criminal penalties only attach to violations of this Act. Thus, redisclosure by nonhealth-care providers does not provide a basis for a criminal action unless such redisclosure is expressly prohibited in this Act. For example, if a family member obtains health-care information under Section 2-104 [50-16-529] and subsequently rediscloses that information to a news reporter, neither the family member nor the reporter has criminal exposure under this Act.

50-16-552. Civil enforcement.

Official Comments

This section permits the appropriate law enforcement official to bring a civil action to enforce the terms of the Act and permits the court to provide any of the remedies available to a patient in a private right of action under Section 8-103 [50-16-553]. Actions under this section are limited to actions to enforce the Act and thus redisclosure by nonhealth-care providers does not provide a basis for civil enforcement except in very limited circumstances as provided in this Act.

50-16-553. Civil remedies.

Official Comments

Subsection (a) [subsection (1) of this section] allows any person (defined in Section 1-102 [50-16-504]) who is aggrieved by a violation of this Act to file an action in a court of appropriate jurisdiction against the responsible health-care provider or other party. This is a standard formulation for standing. For example, this formulation is found in the Uniform Information Practices Code (§3-112). The burden of proof is always on the aggrieved party, except where specifically indicated otherwise. Although a person must be aggrieved in order to maintain a private right of action under this Act, it is worth noting that in many states a provider's violation of law, even if no harm to a patient results, is grounds for administrative sanctions by the state licensing board or other similar authority.

Subsections (b), (e), and (f) [subsections (2), (6), and (7) of this section] authorize three types of relief for the aggrieved party: (1) equitable relief in the form of an injunction ordering the health-care provider or other responsible party to comply with the Act (including, where appropriate, an expungement order or an order to enjoin prospective violations); (2) actual damages suffered by the aggrieved party, plus a suggested $5,000 limit on recovery for nonpecuniary loss if the violation arises out of willful or grossly negligent conduct; and (3) reasonable court costs and attorney's fees where the aggrieved party substantially prevails. Because the Act relies on self-enforcement by aggrieved persons as its principal enforcement mechanism, only a liberal provision for the award of attorney's fees will permit this self-enforcement mechanism to work effectively. A health-care provider who discloses information in good-faith reliance on a certification is not liable for disclosures made pursuant to that certification. See Section 2-103 [50-16-528].

Subsection (c) [evidently intended as a reference to subsection (5) of this section] provides that in an action brought by a patient seeking access to his own record, the health-care provider has the burden of proof if it contends that the health-care information should not be disclosed.

Subsection (f) [evidently intended as a reference to subsection (8) of this section] establishes a statute of limitations for civil actions brought pursuant to this section. States should insert the appropriate time period for their jurisdiction.

The civil remedies provided under this section—like their criminal counterparts—are only available for violations of this Act. Thus, redisclosure by family members, newspaper reporters, or others not covered by the redisclosure provisions in Section 2-104 [50-16-529 and 50-16-530] are not violations of this Act and do not provide a basis for a civil action.

Part Case Notes

Statute Unconstitutional as Applied — Invasion of Right to Privacy: Gryczan and others, all of whom were homosexuals, brought a declaratory judgment action to determine whether 45-5-505 (amended and renumbered 45-8-218), as applied, violated their right of privacy. After reviewing the case of Bowers v. Hardwick, 478 US 186 (1986), in which the U.S. Supreme Court held that the federal constitution does not confer a fundamental right on homosexuals to engage in sodomy, the Supreme Court noted that it had long held that the Montana Constitution affords citizens broader protection of a right to privacy than does the U.S. Constitution and that since privacy is explicit in the Montana Constitution, privacy is a fundamental right and any statute limiting the right must pass the strict scrutiny test. The Supreme Court then applied the test enunciated in Katz v. U.S., 389 US 347 (1967), and adopted by the Montana Supreme Court in Hastetter v. Behan, 196 M 280, 639 P2d 510 (1982), and found that all adults have an expectation of privacy in noncommercial, consensual sexual conduct and that, while society may disapprove of homosexual conduct, society still recognizes that expectation of privacy, even concerning homosexual acts. The Supreme Court then determined that the interests advanced by the state in support of the constitutionality of the statute, the protection of public health by preventing the spread of the HIV-related virus, and the protection of public morals were not supported by the facts and were therefore not compelling state interests justifying an invasion of privacy. For these reasons, the Supreme Court determined the statute to be unconstitutional as applied to noncommercial, same-sex consensual sex between adults. Gryczan v. St., 283 M 433, 942 P2d 112, 54 St. Rep. 699 (1997), followed in Armstrong v. St., 1999 MT 261, 296 M 361, 989 P2d 364, 56 St. Rep. 1045 (1999). (See 2013 amendments to 45-2-101 and 45-8-218.)

WHEREAS, public health would also be served by expanding the availability of informed, voluntary, and confidential HIV diagnostic testing and making HIV diagnostic testing a routine part of general medical care; and

WHEREAS, making HIV diagnostic testing a routine part of general medical care is the national recommendation by the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services, Centers for Disease Control and Prevention."

1997 Amendments: Chapter 197 in definition of health care provider, near middle of first sentence after "laws of this state", inserted "or who is licensed, certified, or otherwise authorized by the laws of another state"; in definition of written informed consent, in (a)(ii) after "confidentiality", substituted "specimen collection" for "blood drawing" and near end substituted "specimen" for "blood sample" (voided by Ch. 524); and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective April 3, 1997.

Chapter 524 in definition of contact deleted (a) that read: "(a) an individual identified by the subject of an HIV-related test as a past or present sexual partner or as a person with whom the subject has shared hypodermic needles or syringes"; inserted definition of informed consent; deleted definition of written informed consent that read: ""Written informed consent" means an agreement in writing that is freely executed by the subject of an HIV-related test, by the subject's legal guardian, or, if there is no legal guardian and the subject is unconscious or otherwise mentally incapacitated, by the subject's next of kin or significant other or a person designated by the subject in hospital records to act on the subject's behalf. The written informed consent must include at least the following:

(i) an explanation of the test, including its purpose, potential uses, limitations, and the meaning of its results;

(ii) an explanation of the procedures to be followed for confidentiality, blood drawing, and counseling, including notification that the test is voluntary and that consent may be withdrawn at any time until the blood sample is taken;

(iii) an explanation of whether and to whom the subject's name and test results may be disclosed;

(iv) a statement that the test may be obtained anonymously if the subject wishes;

(v) the name and address of a health care provider whom the subject approves to receive the subject's test results and to provide the subject with posttest counseling; and

(vi) if the consent is for a test being performed as part of an application for insurance, a statement that only a positive test result will be reported to the designated health care provider and that negative test results may be obtained by the subject from the insurance company.

(b) The department shall develop an agreement form that may be used for purposes of this subsection"; and made minor changes in style.

1995 Amendments: Chapter 418 in definition of Department substituted "department of public health" for "department of health and environmental sciences"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective July 1, 1995.

Chapter 546 in definition of Department substituted "department of public health and human services provided for in 2-15-2201" for "department of health and environmental sciences provided for in 2-15-2101". Amendment effective July 1, 1995.

Transition: Section 499, Ch. 418, L. 1995, provided: "The provisions of 2-15-131 through 2-15-137 apply to [this act]."

Saving Clause: Section 571, Ch. 546, L. 1995, was a saving clause.

1991 Amendment: In definition of contact inserted (b) concerning a person exposed to the test subject in a manner allowing HIV transmission; in definition of HIV-related test substituted "test approved by the federal food and drug administration" for "laboratory test"; in definition of health care provider substituted present text concerning person authorized to provide health care for "physician, nurse, paramedic, psychologist, dentist, public health department agent, or other person providing medical, nursing, psychological, or other health care services of any kind"; inserted definitions of local board, local health officer, and next of kin; in definition of pretest counseling, after "provision of", substituted "counseling" for "written materials" and after "test" inserted "including, at a minimum"; in definition of release of test results, in (a) after "dated", inserted "by the person tested or the person authorized to act for the person tested"; inserted definition of significant other; in definition of written informed consent, in (a) after "guardian", inserted "or, if there is no legal guardian and the subject is unconscious or otherwise mentally incapacitated, by the subject's next of kin, significant other, or a person designated by the subject in hospital records to act on the subject's behalf, and", at end of (a)(ii) inserted "until the blood sample is taken", at beginning of (a)(iii) substituted "an explanation" for "a discussion", and inserted (a)(v) concerning name and address of health care provider and (a)(vi) concerning test performed as part of insurance application; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective July 1, 1991.

Severability: Section 8, Ch. 544, L. 1991, was a severability clause.

Case Notes

Administration of HIV Test Without Consent — Lack of Requisite Information Regarding Patient's Significant Other — Motion for Summary Judgment and Directed Verdict Properly Denied: Howard was brought to the hospital by Schultz, who identified herself as Howard's roommate and girlfriend, after Howard suffered a seizure. Schultz then left the hospital. Howard then suffered another seizure, became violent, and had to be sedated and restrained. Hunter then arrived at the hospital and also identified herself as Howard's girlfriend. A physician ordered an HIV test to determine if the seizure was related to that disease. Because Howard was mentally incapacitated and Hunter's relationship with Howard was unclear to the doctor, the test was administered without consent. At trial, Howard moved for summary judgment and a directed verdict on the issue of the hospital's liability for administering an HIV test without the consent of Howard's significant other, allegedly Hunter, in violation of 50-16-1007 (now repealed), but the motions were denied. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed, holding that because a genuine issue of material fact existed regarding whether the hospital understood whether Hunter met the statutory definition of Howard's significant other and because there was credible evidence to support a finding that Hunter was not Howard's significant other, the question was properly left for the jury to decide. Howard v. St. James Community Hosp., 2006 MT 23, 331 M 60, 129 P3d 126 (2006).

Attorney General's Opinions

Conditions for Release of Information About HIV Test Subject — Imminent Danger to Health or Safety: In reconciling the apparent conflict in the provision of medical information as contained in the Uniform Health Care Information Act and the AIDS Prevention Act, the Attorney General determined that a health care provider may release health care information about the subject of an HIV-related test, including the identity of the subject, to a contact, as defined in this section, without the subject's authorization, only when the health care provider reasonably believes that disclosure will avoid or minimize an imminent danger to the health or safety of the contact or other individual. 44 A.G. 2009 Amendment: Chapter 362 in (1) in two places substituted "HIV diagnostic" for "HIV-related". Amendment effective October 1, 2009.

Preamble: The preamble attached to Ch. 362, L. 2009, provided: "WHEREAS, in 2008, 22 people in Montana received a new HIV diagnosis and 514 people are reported to be living with HIV/AIDS in Montana; and

WHEREAS, an estimated 21% of people living with HIV/AIDS in the U.S. are unaware of their infection; and

WHEREAS, it has been shown that people who are not aware of their HIV-positive status are more likely to transmit the disease than those who know their status; and 1991 Amendment: Near middle of (1), after "donor", inserted "in accordance with nationally accepted standards adopted by the department by rule"; and made minor change in style. Amendment effective July 1, 1991.

1991 Statement of Intent: The statement of intent attached to Ch. 544, L. 1991, provided: "A statement of intent is required for this bill because [section 3] [50-16-1008] gives authority to the department of health and environmental sciences [now department of public health and human services] to adopt rules setting standards that must be met before donation of an organ, semen, or tissues in order to prevent transmission of the virus causing acquired immune deficiency syndrome (AIDS). It is intended that the department adopt nationally accepted standards that are developed for each type of donation and that are apparently most effective in preventing transmission of the virus."

Case Notes

No Abuse of Discretion in Jury Instructions Regarding Negligence, Res Ipsa Loquitur, and Exception to HIV Informed Consent Provision: Howard contended that the trial court abused its discretion by providing insufficient jury instructions that did not allow the jury to determine whether defendant acted recklessly, by failing to inform the jury that the AIDS Prevention Act required defendant to pay per se damages if defendant acted negligently or recklessly by failing to get consent from Howard's alleged significant other prior to administering an HIV test, and by refusing an instruction on res ipsa loquitur permitting proof by circumstantial evidence. The Supreme Court found no abuse of the trial court's discretion. The jury found no breach of defendant's standard of care, so there could be no finding that defendant acted recklessly, and the issue of damages was moot. A res ipsa loquitur instruction was unnecessary because restraints applied on Howard at the hospital were not necessarily the cause of Howard's back injury, which also may have been caused by a seizure rather than the hospital's actions. Last, a material question existed whether Howard's girlfriend was actually a significant other under the AIDS Prevention Act, so the trial court's instruction on the guidelines regarding when an HIV test may be ordered without informed consent adequately informed the jury on the issue. Compiler's Comments

1985 Amendment: In (1)(c) after "determination", inserted "and control" and after "tuberculosis", deleted "in a communicable state".

Statement of Intent: The statement of intent attached to Ch. 61, L. 1985, provided: "A statement of intent is required for House Bill 119 because it adds authority to adopt rules concerning control of tuberculosis to the current authority of the department of health and environmental sciences [now department of public health and human services] in section 50-17-103, MCA, to adopt rules to determine whether tuberculosis exists.

The object of the specific chapter relating to tuberculosis (Title 50, chapter 17, MCA) has always been control of the disease, though the section in that chapter granting the department rulemaking authority only grants DHES [now DPHHS] the power to set standards for determining the existence of TB. However, since DHES [now DPHHS] has independent authority to adopt rules for control of any communicable disease (section 50-1-202, MCA), a category including tuberculosis, the department at present has rules in force prescribing TB control measures. Adding authority to Title 50, chapter 17, for DHES [now DPHHS] to adopt tuberculosis control rules will implement the primary purpose of that chapter and render the rulemaking authority specific to tuberculosis consistent with that granted for control of communicable diseases in general.

Therefore, it is the intent of the legislature that the department of health and environmental sciences [now department of public health and human services] has express rulemaking authority to adopt tuberculosis control rules setting standards for effective outpatient, as well as inpatient, treatment of tuberculosis, except for treatment prescribed by a physician in accordance with current acceptable medical standards; necessary measures to prevent transmission of the disease to others; and reporting to DHES [now DPHHS] and/or local health departments."

1993 Amendment: Chapter 71 at beginning substituted "Human immunodeficiency virus (HIV)" for "Acquired immunodeficiency syndrome (AIDS)". Amendment effective February 23, 1993.

1993 Statement of Intent: The statement of intent attached to Ch. 71, L. 1993, provided: "It is the intent of the legislature to amend 46-18-256 and 50-18-101 in order to comply with federal requirements of the Crime Control Act of 1990 that requires states to enact laws related to human immunodeficiency virus (HIV) testing of certain convicted offenders or be subject to reduced federal funding.

Upon the request of the victim or the victim's representatives, testing and the test results must be made available for the victim's information. Testing information may or may not reveal exposure to the HIV virus. If exposed, the victim can seek medical treatment and take steps to protect others from the further spread of the epidemic.

This bill is intended to be a benefit to public health and safety by attempting to control and limit the potential spread and impact of disease. It is not intended to add additional sanctions or penalties for conviction of sexual abuse offenses or to make criminals of the victims of disease."

Case Notes

Nonresident Laboratory Subjected to Suit Under Long-Arm Statute — Exercise of Jurisdiction Unreasonable — Violation of Due Process: Since 1977, the Montana Department of Health and Environmental Sciences [now Department of Public Health and Human Services], the agency responsible under Title 59, ch. 19, part 2, for the testing of newborns for metabolic disorders, has contracted with an Oregon state laboratory for the testing. Plaintiff's minor son was born in June 1977. A sample of his blood was sent to the Oregon laboratory. No abnormality was reported. A few months later the son exhibited symptoms of a metabolic disorder, and treatment was begun in September 1977. After first filing an action in Oregon, which was later dismissed on procedural grounds, plaintiff filed a negligence action in Montana against the states of Montana and Oregon, alleging that the delay in treatment had caused his son permanent and irreparable brain and neuromuscular damage. The trial court dismissed the action against the state of Oregon on jurisdictional grounds. The Supreme Court affirmed, ruling that although both subsections (b) and (e) of former Rule 4B, M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), potentially confer jurisdiction over the state of Oregon in this case, it would be a denial of due process for the Montana state courts to exercise that jurisdiction. The court found that Oregon had not structured its activities in such a way as to purposely avail itself of the privilege of functioning in Montana. Further, the court ruled that an evaluation of the interests of sovereignty, efficiency of resolution, and provision of important interstate medical services compels the conclusion that it would be unreasonable in this case to exercise jurisdiction over the state of Oregon. Preamble: The preamble attached to Ch. 299, L. 1999, provided: "WHEREAS, there are benefits to the child, the mother, and society by encouraging and enabling mothers to breastfeed their children; and

WHEREAS, an infant who is breast-fed receives protection against infection, illness, and allergies and long-term positive effects on the development, intelligence, and health of breast-fed children have been found; and

WHEREAS, a protective effect against various types of cancer and greater emotional and physical health are found for mothers who breastfeed; and

WHEREAS, breastfeeding promotes sufficient birth spacing, improved vaccine effectiveness, and decreased food and medical expenses, which all have positive societal effects;

WHEREAS, the Montana Supplemental Nutrition Program for Women, Infants, and Children (WIC) promotes breastfeeding education and support; and

WHEREAS, legislation to clarify the right to breastfeed is necessary to promote breastfeeding by mothers and remove any stumbling block from influencing a mother's decision to breastfeed or continue breastfeeding out of fear of reprisal."

Effective Date: This section is effective October 1, 1999.

ABORTION

Chapter Case Notes

Constitutionality of Judicial Bypass of Parental Notice Requirement Upheld by U.S. Supreme Court: Physicians and other medical personnel brought a civil action in the U.S. District Court of Montana challenging the "judicial bypass" provision in 50-20-212 (now repealed) by which a court could waive the requirement for parental notification of the minor's intent to seek an abortion. The District Court held the bypass provision unconstitutional because Bellotti v. Baird, 443 US 622 (1979), as interpreted by the District Court, required that judicial bypass mechanisms authorize waiver of notice requirements whenever the abortion would be in the best interests of the minor, not just when notification would not be in the minor's best interests. The Ninth Circuit Court, in Wicklund v. Salvagni, 93 F3d 567 (1996), affirmed, stating that it was bound by its prior decision in Glick v. McKay, 937 F2d 434 (1991), in which it struck down a similar parental notification and judicial bypass statute in Nevada. The U.S. Supreme Court pointed out that in Ohio v. Akron Center for Reproductive Health, 497 US 502 (1990) (Akron II), it had upheld a parental notification statute that was virtually indistinguishable from 50-20-212 (now repealed) and in the Akron II opinion declined to decide whether a parental notification statute must have a "judicial bypass" provision to be constitutional, holding only that the Ohio statute at issue in Akron II satisfied any criteria that might be required for a judicial bypass of a parental consent statute. The Supreme Court pointed out that the Ninth Circuit Court affirmed the District Court decision based only upon its previous decision in Glick, and that decision, the Supreme Court said, simply cannot be squared with its decision in Akron II. Because the statute at issue in Akron II was upheld and because that statute is virtually indistinguishable from 50-20-212 (now repealed), the Supreme Court held that 50-20-212 (now repealed) was also constitutional. The Supreme Court held that the court of appeals should have drawn no conclusions from the fact that the statute at issue in Bellotti allowed a court to bypass the parental consent to an abortion if it found that the abortion was in the best interests of the minor, while the statute at issue in the present case allows bypass of notification if notice is not in the best interests of the minor. Lambert v. Wicklund, 520 US 292 (1997). See also Intermtn. Wade. Since the Missouri provision banning abortion counseling did not adversely affect the parties, the court ruled the controversy moot. Webster v. Reproductive Health Serv., 109 S Ct 3040 (1989).

Severability: Section 13, Ch. 566, L. 1995, was a severability clause.

Administrative Rules

ARM 37.21.104 Certificate of informed consent.

Case Notes

Informed Consent Requirement: In accordance with the U.S. Supreme Court decision in Planned Parenthood of Central Missouri v. Danforth, 428 US 52 (1976), Montana's statute requiring informed consent prior to an abortion is constitutional as the decision to abort is important and a woman's full knowledge and awareness of the decision may be assured constitutionally by the state to the extent of requiring her prior written consent. (See 1995 amendment.) Doe v. Deschamps, 461 F. Supp. 682 (D.C. Mont. 1976).

Spousal Notice Requirement — Unconstitutional as Written: Because Montana's statute requiring notice by a woman to her husband prior to an abortion does not prescribe the method of giving notice, it is unduly restrictive and does not afford adequate protection for either the physician or the pregnant woman and is therefore unconstitutional as written. (See 1995 amendment.) Doe v. Deschamps, 461 F. Supp. 682 (D.C. Mont. 1976).

1995 Amendments — Composite Section: Chapter 321 inserted (5) excluding performance of abortions from the utilization plan of a physician assistant-certified; in (6) inserted reference to subsection (5); and made minor changes in style.

Chapter 354 in (3), at end after "45-2-101", deleted "(37)"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective April 11, 1995.

Style changes in the chapters were slightly different. In each case, the codifier chose the most appropriate.

Severability: Section 18, Ch. 354, L. 1995, was a severability clause.

1981 Amendment: Changed internal references to section 45-2-101 in subsection (3) to reflect amendment of that section.

Case Notes

Prohibition Against Abortion by Physician Assistant-Certified (Now Physician Assistant) Unconstitutional Violation of Right of Privacy: After the decision in Mazurek v. Armstrong, 520 US 968, 138 L Ed 2d 162, 117 S Ct 1865 (1997), ibid., Dr. Armstrong and Cahill, a physician assistant-certified (now physician assistant), filed this case in state District Court challenging the constitutionality of 37-20-103 and this section, which prohibit a physician assistant-certified (now physician assistant) from performing abortions. (See 2005 amendment.) The District Court found that the prohibition affected a woman's right to obtain a legal first trimester abortion and that the state had advanced no compelling interest to justify prohibiting Cahill from performing abortions, as she had for 20 years, and granted plaintiffs' motion for a preliminary injunction. Noting that Montana adheres to one of the most stringent protections of its citizens' right of privacy in the United States, exceeding even the federal constitution, the Supreme Court affirmed, holding that legislation that infringes on the exercise of the right of privacy must be reviewed under a strict scrutiny analysis. Under Art. II, sec. 10, Mont. Const., every individual is guaranteed the right to make medical judgments affecting that person's bodily integrity and health, in partnership with a chosen health care provider and free from government interference, except in very limited circumstances not at issue here. The court agreed that the statutory restrictions in question impacted a woman's right to procreative autonomy and her right to seek and obtain a specific lawful medical procedure from the health care provider of her choice, in this case a previability abortion from a physician assistant-certified (now physician assistant), and were thus an unconstitutional violation of the right of privacy. Armstrong v. St., 1999 MT 261, 296 M 361, 989 P2d 364, 56 St. Rep. 1045 (1999), following Gryczan v. St., 283 M 433, 942 P2d 112, 54 St. Rep. 699 (1997). See also Intermtn. Planned Parenthood v. St. (Cause No. BDV 97-477) (June 29, 1998) (First Judicial District Court ruling (not appealed to Montana Supreme Court) that the law banning partial-birth abortion procedure infringed on a woman's right to privacy under Art. II, sec. 10, Mont. Const.), and Planned Parenthood of Missoula v. St. (judgment of the First Judicial District, Lewis & Clark County, Dec. 29, 1999, declaring provisions of the Montana Abortion Control Act and the Woman's Right-to-Know Act unconstitutional under Art. II. sec. 10, Mont. Const.).

Standing of Health Care Providers to Litigate Privacy Right of Patient to Obtain Previability Abortion: In a case of first impression, the Supreme Court relied on federal law to decide that the statutes directed at health care providers in 37-20-103 and this section, which prohibit a physician assistant-certified (now physician assistant) from performing abortions (see 2005 amendment), interfered with the normal functioning of the physician-patient relationship by criminalizing certain procedures. To establish standing to challenge government action: (1) the complaining party must clearly allege past, present, or threatened injury to a property right or civil right; and (2) the alleged injury must be distinguishable from the injury to the public generally but need not be exclusive to the complaining party. In this case, based on the closeness of the physician-patient relationship, the health care providers had standing, on behalf of their women patients, to assert the women's constitutional privacy right under Art. II, sec. 10, Mont. Const., to obtain a previability abortion from the health care provider of their choosing. Armstrong v. St., 1999 MT 261, 296 M 361, 989 P2d 364, 56 St. Rep. 1045 (1999), following Singleton v. Wulff, 428 US 106, 49 L Ed 2d 826, 96 S Ct 2868 (1976). See also Intermtn. Planned Parenthood v. St. (Cause No. BDV 97-477) (June 29, 1998) (First Judicial District Court ruling (not appealed to Montana Supreme Court) that the law banning partial-birth abortion procedure infringed on a woman's right to privacy under Art. II, sec. 10, Mont. Const.), and Planned Parenthood of Missoula v. St. (judgment of the First Judicial District, Lewis & Clark County, Dec. 29, 1999, declaring provisions of the Montana Abortion Control Act and the Woman's Right-to-Know Act unconstitutional under Art. II. sec. 10, Mont. Const.).

"Physician Only" Limitation on Performance of Abortions Upheld by U.S. Supreme Court — No Evidence of "Undue Burden": A group of licensed physicians and one licensed physician assistant-certified (now physician assistant) practicing in Montana brought an action in the U.S. District Court challenging the constitutionality of this section, claiming that the statute allowing only licensed physicians to conduct abortions imposed an "undue burden" on a woman's right to an abortion within the meaning of Planned Parenthood of SE. Pa. v. Casey, 505 US 833 (1992). (See 2005 amendment.) The District Court, in Armstrong v. Mazurek, 906 F. Supp. 561

(D.C. Mont. 1995), denied the plaintiffs' motion for a preliminary injunction, finding that the plaintiffs had not established any likelihood of their success on the merits. The Ninth Circuit Court vacated the District Court judgment, holding in Mazurek v. Armstrong, 94 F3d 566 (9th Cir. 1996), that the plaintiffs had shown a "fair chance of success on the merits" of their claim, and remanded the case to the District Court with instructions to reconsider the "balance of hardships" and to determine whether entry of a preliminary injunction was warranted. The District Court entered an injunction pending appeal, and the state was granted certiorari. Noting that the Ninth Circuit Court did not challenge the District Court's conclusion that there was insufficient evidence in the record to show that a statute allowing only physicians to perform abortions in Montana placed an undue burden upon women seeking abortions, the Supreme Court said that the legality of the "physician only" requirement at issue in the present case is controlled by its decision in Casey. In that case, the Supreme Court upheld a "physician only" requirement for the distribution of information to abortion patients when there was insufficient evidence in the record to show that the law was a substantial obstacle to women seeking abortions. The Supreme Court pointed out that the decision of the Ninth Circuit Court was based upon the rationale that the "physician only" requirement could be invalidated if the purpose of the law, as assumed by the court of appeals, was to impose a substantial burden on women seeking abortions. The Supreme Court noted that it had already held in Washington v. Davis, 426 US 229 (1976), that courts should not assume an unconstitutional legislative intent even when statutes produce harmful results and that in this case, there was no evidence of an unconstitutional legislative result because there was no evidence of an undue burden. Moreover, the Supreme Court said that the respondent's argument that the Legislature must have had an invalid purpose because all health evidence contradicts the claim that there is any health basis for the statute was foreclosed by its opinion in Casey when it held that states have broad latitude to decide that a particular function must be carried out only by licensed professionals even though objective evidence might suggest that those same tasks could be performed by others. The Supreme Court also noted that it had held in Roe v. Wade, 410 US 113 (1973), and Conn. v. Menillo, 423 US 9 (1975), that a state may limit the performance of abortions to physicians only. For these reasons, the Supreme Court vacated the judgment of the court of appeals and remanded the case to the District Court. Mazurek v. Armstrong, 520 US 968 (1997).

Prohibiting Solicitation and Advertising — Unconstitutional: This section's prohibition against solicitation for the purpose of attracting a person to come to a doctor or agency to have an abortion is unconstitutional as it infringes upon a person's first amendment rights. (See 1999 amendment.) Doe v. Deschamps, 461 F. Supp. 682 (D.C. Mont. 1976).

Physician Concurrence After Viability — Constitutionality: The physician concurrence requirement of this section is constitutional because it is limited to the period "after viability of the fetus", when the concern is for the preservation of the "potentiality of life" compatible with the health of the mother. This holding follows the statement in Roe v. Wade, 410 US 113, at 163 (1973), that "State regulation protective of fetal life after viability thus has both logical and biological justifications." At such a point the state may properly require more than the opinion of the woman's attending physician to insure that the potentiality of life is not destroyed. Doe v. Deschamps, 461 F. Supp. 682 (D.C. Mont. 1976).

Constitutionality of Judicial Bypass of Parental Notice Requirement Upheld by U.S. Supreme Court: Physicians and other medical personnel brought a civil action in the U.S. District Court of Montana challenging the "judicial bypass" provision in 50-20-212 (now repealed) by which a court could waive the requirement for parental notification of the minor's intent to seek an abortion. The District Court held the bypass provision unconstitutional because Bellotti v. Baird, 443 US 622 (1979), as interpreted by the District Court, required that judicial bypass mechanisms authorize waiver of notice requirements whenever the abortion would be in the best interests of the minor, not just when notification would not be in the minor's best interests. The Ninth Circuit Court, in Wicklund v. Salvagni, 93 F3d 567 (1996), affirmed, stating that it was bound by its prior decision in Glick v. McKay, 937 F2d 434 (1991), in which it struck down a similar parental notification and judicial bypass statute in Nevada. The U.S. Supreme Court pointed out that in Ohio v. Akron Center for Reproductive Health, 497 US 502 (1990) (Akron II), it had upheld a parental notification statute that was virtually indistinguishable from 50-20-212 (now repealed) and in the Akron II opinion declined to decide whether a parental notification statute must have a "judicial bypass" provision to be constitutional, holding only that the Ohio statute at issue in Akron II satisfied any criteria that might be required for a judicial bypass of a parental consent statute. The Supreme Court pointed out that the Ninth Circuit Court affirmed the District Court decision based only upon its previous decision in Glick, and that decision, the Supreme Court said, simply cannot be squared with its decision in Akron II. Because the statute at issue in Akron II was upheld and because that statute is virtually indistinguishable from 50-20-212 (now repealed), the Supreme Court held that 50-20-212 (now repealed) was also constitutional. The Supreme Court held that the court of appeals should have drawn no conclusions from the fact that the statute at issue in Bellotti allowed a court to bypass the parental consent to an abortion if it found that the abortion was in the best interests of the minor, while the statute at issue in the present case allows bypass of notification if notice is not in the best interests of the minor. CHAPTER 22
DETERMINATION OF DEATH

General Provisions

Part Case Notes

Action to Be Dismissed Upon Death of Either Spouse During Pendency of Dissolution Proceeding — ". . . until death do you part": One spouse in a dissolution action died shortly after a hearing was held on his petition for dissolution of marriage, but no judgment had yet been entered, either written or oral. In affirming the District Court in dismissing the petition, the Supreme Court held that death terminates a marriage as a matter of law; therefore, there is nothing for the court to dissolve. The death of either spouse during the pendency of a dissolution action prior to the entry of judgment divests the court of all jurisdiction over the action, including matters involving the distribution of property. In re Marriage of Lawrence, 212 M 327, 687 P2d 1026, 41 St. Rep. 1771 (1984).

50-22-101. Determination of death.

Commissioner's Comment to 1980 Uniform Act

[Section 1 of the Uniform Act (see compiler's comments to 1983 version — 1980 Uniform Law)] provides comprehensive bases for determining death in all situations. It is based on a ten-year evolution of statutory language on this subject. The first statute passed in Kansas in 1970. In 1972, Professor Alexander Capron and Dr. Leon Kass refined the concept further in "A Statutory Definition of the Standards for Determining Human Death: An Appraisal and a Proposal," 121 Pa.L.Rev. 87. In 1975, the Law and Medicine Committee of the American Bar Association (ABA) drafted a Model Definition of Death Act. In 1978, the National Conference of Commissioners on Uniform State Laws (NCCUSL) completed the Uniform Brain Death Act. It was based on the prior work of the ABA. In 1979, the American Medical Association (AMA) created its own Model Determination of Death statute. In the meantime, some twenty-five state legislatures adopted statutes based on one or another of the existing models.

The interest in these statutes arises from modern advances in lifesaving technology. A person may be artificially supported for respiration and circulation after all brain functions cease irreversibly. The medical profession, also, has developed techniques for determining loss of brain functions while cardiorespiratory support is administered. At the same time, the common law definition of death cannot assure recognition of these techniques. The common law standard for determining death is the cessation of all vital functions, traditionally demonstrated by "an absence of spontaneous respiratory and cardiac functions." There is, then, a potential disparity between current and accepted biomedical practice and the common law.

The proliferation of model acts and uniform acts, while indicating a legislative need, also may be confusing. All existing acts have the same principal goal—extension of the common law to include the new techniques for determination of death. With no essential disagreement on policy, the associations which have drafted statutes met to find common language. This Act contains that common language, and is the result of agreement between the ABA, AMA, and NCCUSL.

Part (1) codifies the existing common law basis for determining death—total failure of the cardiorespiratory system. Part (2) extends the common law to include the new procedures for determination of death based upon irreversible loss of all brain functions. The overwhelming majority of cases will continue to be determined according to part (1). When artificial means of support preclude a determination under part (1), the Act recognizes that death can be determined by the alternative procedures.

Under part (2), the entire brain must cease to function, irreversibly. The "entire brain" includes the brain stem, as well as the neocortex. The concept of "entire brain" distinguishes determination of death under this Act from "neocortical death" or "persistent vegetative state." These are not deemed valid medical or legal bases for determining death.

This Act also does not concern itself with living wills, death with dignity, euthanasia, rules on death certificates, maintaining life support beyond brain death in cases of pregnant women or of organ donors, and protection for the dead body. These subjects are left to other law.

This Act is silent on acceptable diagnostic tests and medical procedures. It sets the general legal standard for determining death, but not the medical criteria for doing so. The medical profession remains free to formulate acceptable medical practices and to utilize new biomedical knowledge, diagnostic tests, and equipment.

It is unnecessary for the Act to address specifically the liability of persons who make determinations. No person authorized by law to determine death, who makes such a determination in accordance with the Act, should, or will be, liable for damages in any civil action or subject to prosecution in any criminal proceeding for his acts or the acts of others based on that determination. No person who acts in good faith, in reliance on a determination of death, should, or will be, liable for damages in any civil action or subject to prosecution in any criminal proceeding for his acts. There is no need to deal with these issues in the text of this Act.

Time of death, also, is not specifically addressed. In those instances in which time of death affects legal rights, this Act states the bases for determining death. Time of death is a fact to be determined with all others in each individual case, and may be resolved, when in doubt, upon expert testimony before the appropriate court.

Finally, since this Act should apply to all situations, it should not be joined with the Uniform Anatomical Gift Act so that its application is limited to cases of organ donation.

Commissioner's Comment to 1978 Uniform Act

[Section 1 of the Uniform Act (see compiler's comments to 1977 version — 1978 Uniform Law)] legislates the concept of brain death. The Act does not preclude a determination of death under other legal or medical criteria, including the traditional criteria of cessation of respiration and circulation. Other criteria are practical in cases where artificial life-support systems are not utilized. Even those criteria are indicative of brain death.

"Functioning" is a critical word in the Act. It expresses the idea of purposeful activity in all parts of the brain, as distinguished from random activity. In a dead brain, some meaningless cellular processes, detectable by sensitive monitoring equipment, could create legal confusion if the word "activity" were substituted for "functioning".

1983 Amendment: Substituted entire section (see 1983 Session Law) for "A human body with irreversible cessation of total brain function, as determined according to usual and customary standards of medical practice, is dead for all legal purposes."

Source of 1983 Version — 1980 Uniform Law: The 1983 version of this section is an enactment of the Uniform Determination of Death Act (1980), drafted by the National Conference of Commissioners on Uniform State Laws.

Source of 1977 Version — 1978 Uniform Law: The 1977 version of 50-22-101 was based on the Uniform Brain Death Act of the National Conference of Commissioners on Uniform State Laws, adopted in 1978. There were some differences, however, which can be seen readily by comparing the pre-1983 version of 50-22-101 (see Ch. 228, L. 1977) with the text of the Uniform Act:

"Section 1. [Brain Death.] For legal and medical purposes, an individual who has sustained irreversible cessation of all functioning of the brain, including the brain stem, is dead. A determination under this section must be made in accordance with reasonable medical standards.

Section 2. [Short Title.] This Act may be cited as the Uniform Brain Death Act."

Rulemaking is primarily needed to add a species of animal to those presently designated "wild animals" by the act if the chance of rabies occurring in that species increases beyond its present level. Coyotes are an example of a species which may become a rabies threat in the future.

As for other rules, most would clarify terms and phrases used in the bill. Examples of potential rule subject matter are:

(1) to clarify what will be considered a fur-bearing enterprise (50-23-102);

(2) to clarify what controls by zoological exhibitors will be considered to adequately prevent physical contact by the public with wild animals."

Contingent Effective Date: Section 7(2), Ch. 172, L. 1999, provided that this section is effective upon the implementation of a state organic certification program pursuant to 80-11-601(3). On Friday, June 14, 2002, the Department of Agriculture certified the passage of the petition to begin implementation of the organic certification program as referred to in 80-11-601 and also certified that implementation of the program had begun.

1997 Amendment: Chapter 42 in definition of consumer commodity, in (b), inserted parenthetical reference to the Federal Insecticide, Fungicide, and Rodenticide Act and in (c) inserted parenthetical reference to the United States Code; in definition of food additive, in (b)(iv), substituted "21 U.S.C. 603, et seq." for "21 U.S.C. 71, et seq."; in definition of pesticide chemical substituted "7 U.S.C. 136, et seq." for "7 U.S.C. 135 through 135k"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective March 12, 1997.

1995 Amendments: Chapter 418 in definition of consumer commodity, in (d) after "U.S.C.", inserted "201"; in definition of Department substituted "department of public health" for "department of health and environmental sciences"; in definition of State Board substituted "board of public health" for "board of health and environmental sciences"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective July 1, 1995.

Chapter 546 in definition of Department substituted "department of public health and human services provided for in 2-15-2201" for "department of health and environmental sciences provided for in Title 2, chapter 15, part 21"; deleted definition of State Board that read: ""State board" or "board" means the board of health and environmental sciences provided for in 2-15-2104"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective July 1, 1995.

Transition: Section 499, Ch. 418, L. 1995, provided: "The provisions of 2-15-131 through 2-15-137 apply to [this act]."

1991 Amendment: In definition of hamburger increased from three to four the number of grades, substituted "regular hamburger" for "economy hamburger" and set lean content at no less than 70%, substituted "lean hamburger" for "regular hamburger" and set fat content at no greater than 22% and lean content at no less than 78%, decreased extra lean hamburger fat content from 18% to 16% and set lean content at no less than 84%, and inserted definition of super lean hamburger with fat content no greater than 12% and lean content no less than 88%; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective March 20, 1991.

1989 Amendments: Chapter 169 inserted definitions of approved source, artesian water, bottled water, carbonated water, demineralized water, distilled water, drinking water, fluoridated water, mineral water, purified water, spring water, water-bottling plant, and well water; and made minor change in grammar.

Chapter 472 corrected internal reference in definition of consumer commodity; and made minor changes in phraseology. Amendment effective April 8, 1989.

1985 Amendment: Inserted (23) defining "Organic food", (29) defining "Processing", and (33) defining "Synthetically compounded". Amendment effective January 1, 1986.

1981 Amendment: Inserted (2) defining "Beef patty mix"; inserted "or ground beef" after "Hamburger" at the beginning of (16); deleted "and with or without the addition of seasoning, if no fat other that [sic] suet is incorporated in the hamburger, the total fat content does not exceed 20%, and" after "with or without the addition of suet" in (16); added the last sentence of (16) and (16)(a) through (16)(c) relating to grades of hamburger; deleted former (17) defining "imitation hamburger"; added "or retail establishment" at the end of (26); inserted (29) defining "retail establishment"; deleted former (30) defining "wallboard" signs; and made minor changes in grammar.

Pleading of Conformity to Federal Act: Under former law, in an action for damages resultant from consumption of an unwholesome and deleterious article, an allegation in the answer of a dealer in foodstuffs in unbroken packages that the food sold conformed to the rules of Congress under the national pure food acts and therefore could not be considered adulterated or objectionable was a conclusion of the pleader, in the absence of a statement of facts from which it could be determined that the government would permit the sale of the article in the condition it was when sold. No Requirement That Adulterated Food Poses Danger to Human Health — Embargo Justified — Summary Judgment Proper: The dairy filed a complaint against the state, challenging the state's embargo of the dairy's milk products following the discovery of a black substance in the milk. The dairy claimed that in order for milk to be contaminated, and thus adulterated, it must be dangerous to human health. The Supreme Court held that under the plain meaning of 50-31-509, there is no requirement that adulterated food be adulterated so as to be dangerous or fraudulent in order for it to be embargoed or detained. It is sufficient that the food is adulterated. When there was no evidence raising genuine issues of material fact concerning the scope of the embargo or the quantity and identity of the black substance, the District Court did not err when it granted summary judgment to the state on these issues. Clover Leaf Dairy v. St., 285 M 380, 948 P2d 1164, 54 St. Rep. 1203 (1997).

Abstracting of Components: Under former law, when pellets which were used for sheep feed were manufactured from screenings from the harvest of wheat by cooking and crushing the seeds, extracting the oils therefrom, and pressing the residue into pellets, it was error to give an instruction as to abstracting of valuable components, since the oil was removed from the seeds but nothing was removed from the pellets which was the product sold. Seaton Ranch Co. v. Mont. Vegetable Oil & Feed Co., 123 M 396, 217 P2d 549 (1950).

Civil Liability: Under former law, the Pure Food and Drug Act made the seller the insurer of the purity of food products sold by him, and guilty knowledge of its impurity was not an ingredient of the offense charged. Bolitho v. Safeway Stores, Inc., 109 M 213, 95 P2d 443 (1939).

Pleading of Adulteration: Under former law, a charge in a complaint that defendant sold and delivered to plaintiff's husband, for immediate use in his family, including plaintiff, adulterated meat containing "diseased, infected, putrid, decomposed, poisonous acid and animal matter", sufficiently charged defendant with a violation of the Pure Food and Drug Act and with a breach of duty constituting legal negligence. Case Notes

Civil Liability:

Under former law, the Pure Food and Drug Act made the seller the insurer of the purity of food products sold by him, and guilty knowledge of its impurity was not an ingredient of the offense charged. Bolitho v. Safeway Stores, Inc., 109 M 213, 95 P2d 443 (1939).

Under former law, liability under the Pure Food and Drug Act arose from a violation of the statute, and it was immaterial whether the foundation of an action based upon such violation was laid in negligence or warranty. Kelley v. John R. Daily Co., 56 M 63, 181 P 326 (1919).

Pleading Defendant's Duty: Under former law, a complaint alleging that at the time of the sale of impure food by defendant to plaintiff, defendant was engaged in selling at retail, to the public generally, meat and meat products for human consumption was sufficient to bring the case within the statute and disclose the duty defendant owed to the public, including plaintiff, to see that its food products offered for sale were not adulterated within the meaning of such statute. Kelley v. John R. Daily Co., 56 M 63, 181 P 326 (1919).

Agency's Probable Cause Determination Reviewable by Courts — De Minimis Exception Applicable to Review: Unlike federal law, state law provides for judicial review of an agency's probable cause determination under this section. Agency actions under this section, including an agency's probable cause determination, are reviewable by the courts, and courts are not prohibited from applying the de minimis exception to review of the agency's probable cause determination. Clover Leaf Dairy v. St., 285 M 380, 948 P2d 1164, 54 St. Rep. 1203 (1997).

Chocolate Inventory Destroyed — Contamination Exclusion Inapplicable: After discovering that a worker had been exposed to hepatitis, the owners of Helena's Parrot Confectionery (the Parrot) immediately alerted the city health department. When the state Department of Health and Environmental Sciences [now Department of Public Health and Human Services] subsequently placed an embargo on all candy, the Parrot, without testing for contamination, voluntarily destroyed its existing inventory and submitted a claim for the loss to its insurance company. Citing the high probability of contamination and the contamination exclusion in the insurance contract, the District Court granted summary judgment in favor of the insurance company. Adopting the contamination definitions in Am. Cas. Co. of Reading, Pa. v. Myrick, 304 F2d 179 (5th Cir. 1962), Hi-G, Inc. v. St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co., 391 F2d 924 (1st Cir. 1968), and Auten v. Employers Nat'l Ins. Co., 722 SW 2d 468 (Tex. App. 1987), the Supreme Court reversed, holding that absent proof of "actual" contamination, the contamination exclusion does not bar coverage for the Parrot's losses. Duensing v. Traveler's Co., 257 M 376, 849 P2d 203, 50 St. Rep. 316 (1993).

CONTROLLED SUBSTANCES

Chapter Commissioners' Note

The Uniform Controlled Substances Act is designed to supplant the Uniform Narcotic Drug Act, adopted by the National Conference of Commissioners on Uniform State Laws in 1933, and the Model State Drug Abuse Control Act, relating to depressant, stimulant, and hallucinogenic drugs, promulgated in 1966. With the enactment of the new Federal narcotic and dangerous drug law, the "Comprehensive Drug Abuse Prevention and Control Act of 1970" (Public Law 91-513, short title "Controlled Substances Act" [21 U.S.C.A. §801, et seq.]), it is necessary that the States update and revise their narcotic, marihuana, and dangerous drug laws.

This Uniform Act was drafted to achieve uniformity between the laws of the several States and those of the Federal government. It has been designed to complement the new Federal narcotic and dangerous drug legislation and provide an interlocking trellis of Federal and State law to enable government at all levels to control more effectively the drug abuse problem.

The exploding drug abuse problem in the past ten years has reached epidemic proportions. No longer is the problem confined to a few major cities or to a particular economic group. Today it encompasses almost every nationality, race, and economic level. It has moved from the major urban areas into the suburban and even rural communities, and has manifested itself in every State in the Union.

Much of this major increase in drug use and abuse is attributable to the increased mobility of our citizens and their affluence. As modern American society becomes increasingly mobile, drugs clandestinely manufactured or illegally diverted from legitimate channels in one part of a State are easily transported for sale to another part of that State or even to another State. Nowhere is this mobility manifested with greater impact than in the legitimate pharmaceutical industry. The lines of distribution of the products of this major national industry cross in and out of a State innumerable times during the manufacturing or distribution processes. To assure the continued free movement of controlled substances between States, while at the same time securing such States against drug diversion from legitimate sources, it becomes critical to approach not only the control of illicit and legitimate traffic in these substances at the national and international levels, but also to approach this problem at the State and local level on a uniform basis.

A main objective of this Uniform Act is to create a coordinated and codified system of drug control, similar to that utilized at the Federal level, which classifies all narcotics, marihuana, and dangerous drugs subject to control into five schedules, with each schedule having its own criteria for drug placement. This classification system will enable the agency charged with implementing it to add, delete, or reschedule substances based upon new scientific findings and the abuse potential of the substance.

Another objective of this Act is to establish a closed regulatory system for the legitimate handlers of controlled drugs in order better to prevent illicit drug diversion. This system will require that these individuals register with a designated State agency, maintain records, and make biennial inventories of all controlled drug stocks.

The Act sets out the prohibited activities in detail, but does not prescribe specific fines or sentences, this being left to the discretion of the individual States. It further provides innovative law enforcement tools to improve investigative efforts and provides for interim education and training programs relating to the drug abuse problem.

The Uniform Act updates and improves existing State laws and insures legislative and administrative flexibility to enable the States to cope with both present and future drug problems. It is recognized that law enforcement may not be the ultimate solution to the drug abuse problem. It is hoped that present research efforts will be continued and vigorously expanded, particularly as they relate to the development of rehabilitation, treatment, and educational programs for addicts, drug dependent persons, and potential drug abusers.

Chapter Compiler's Comments

Deviation From Uniform Act: Although Montana law on controlled substances is based extensively on the Uniform Controlled Substances Act, some sections of Montana law are not based on the Uniform Act. Likewise, some sections of the Uniform Act were not adopted. The sections not based on the uniform law are 50-32-233, 50-32-305, 50-32-313, and 50-32-401 through 50-32-405. The uniform law sections not adopted in Montana are 401 through 409, 501, 503 through 507, 601, 602, and 604 through 607. Under each section of Montana law, the corresponding section of uniform law is listed in a compiler's comment with the catchline "source".

Severability Clause: Section 30, Ch. 412, L. 1973, was a severability clause.

2013 Amendment: Chapter 135 inserted definition of dangerous drug analogue; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective October 1, 2013.

2001 Amendments — Composite Section: Chapter 388 in definition of drug substituted "has the same meaning as provided in 37-7-101" for "means:

(i) a substance recognized as a drug in the official United States Pharmacopoeia/National Formulary or any supplement to it;

(ii) a substance intended for use in the diagnosis, cure, mitigation, treatment, or prevention of disease in humans or animals;

(iii) a substance, other than food, intended to affect the structure or a function of the body of humans or animals; and

(iv) a substance intended for use as a component of an article specified in subsection (13)(a)(i), (13)(a)(ii), or (13)(a)(iii).

(b) Drug does not include a device or its components, parts, or accessories"; substituted definition of prescription for former definition that read: ""Prescription" has the meaning that it has in 37-7-101"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective October 1, 2001.

Chapter 483 in definition of department substituted reference to department of labor and industry for reference to department of commerce and substituted "part 17" for "part 18"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective July 1, 2001.

1995 Amendment: Chapter 198 in definition of practitioner inserted (c) concerning a physician licensed to practice medicine or a dentist licensed to practice dentistry in another state; and made minor changes in style.

Applicability: Section 2, Ch. 198, L. 1995, provided: "[This act] applies to prescriptions written on and after October 1, 1995."

1983 Amendments: Chapter 155 inserted (14) defining "hashish".

Chapter 247, in (3), substituted "board of pharmacy" for "board of pharmacists".

1981 Amendments: Chapter 274 substituted "department of commerce" for "department of professional and occupational licensing" in (8); and changed internal references to the department and the board.

Chapter 379 substituted "drug enforcement administration" for "bureau of narcotics and dangerous drugs" in (4); deleted a reference to the official Homeopathic Pharmacopoeia in (13)(a)(i).

Case Notes

Hashish Not Marijuana — Definitions Harmonized: A medical marijuana card that was issued pursuant to the former Medical Marijuana Act as set forth in 50-46-101 through 50-46-210 (now repealed) did not entitle the defendant to possess hashish, which is specifically differentiated in 50-32-101. The Act was clear and unambiguous on its face, and the District Court's interpretation appropriately harmonized the statutes. St. v. Pirello, 2012 MT 155, 365 Mont. 399, 282 P.3d 662.

Ingestion of Dangerous Drugs Considered Constructive Possession When Accompanied by Evidence of Knowing and Voluntary Possession: The state sought to revoke a juvenile youth's probation on grounds that the youth's urinalysis tested positive for methamphetamines, opiates, and marijuana. The youth argued that once the drugs were ingested, the youth no longer had dominion or control over them and thus could not be considered to be in possession of drugs. In a case of first impression, the Supreme Court considered whether constructive possession can be proved by a positive urinalysis. The court agreed with the youth that once a substance is ingested and then assimilated into a person's bloodstream, the person who ingested it ceases to exercise dominion and control over the substance, but the court also concluded that the presence of an illegal substance in the body constitutes circumstantial evidence of prior possession of that substance, if even for a short time. However, based on statutory definitions, the presence of a dangerous drug in one's body, standing alone, is insufficient to sustain a conviction for possession of dangerous drugs because possession also requires proof that the drug was knowingly or voluntarily ingested. Thus, the presence of a controlled substance in a person's blood or urine constitutes sufficient circumstantial evidence to prove prior possession beyond a reasonable doubt only when accompanied by other corroborating evidence of knowing and voluntary possession, such as admission of drug use. Here, the youth admitted using methamphetamine, which provided direct evidence that the youth knowingly and voluntarily possessed methamphetamine as charged. However, the youth made no admission of using opiates or marijuana, so there was no corroborating evidence to support the positive urinalysis for those substances. Thus, the determination that the youth illegally possessed opiates and marijuana was reversed. In re R.L.H., 2005 MT 177, 327 M 520, 116 P3d 791 (2005).

Hashish Not Dangerous Drug: The information, filed prior to the 1983 amendment of this section, charged the defendant with possession of more than 1 gram of hashish in violation of 45-9-102(1). Section 45-9-102(1) refers to the definition of dangerous drug in this section. This section did not, prior to the 1983 amendment, define hashish. Charging an individual with the possession of hashish, without mentioning its derivation from marijuana, does not charge that individual with a crime. The District Court properly dismissed the information, and the Supreme Court affirmed. St. v. Kelman, 199 M 481, 649 P2d 1292, 39 St. Rep. 1545 (1982).

Possession of Each Drug in Schedules a Separate Crime: It was proper for the County Attorney to charge defendant with three counts for possession of three prohibited drugs. The Legislature intended to provide a distinct crime for each of the drugs listed in the schedules. St. v. Meader, 184 M 32, 601 P2d 386 (1979); see also St. v. Meadors, 177 M 100, 580 P2d 903 (1978).

Failure to Republish Schedule: Failure of the Board and the Department to revise and republish schedules as required by 50-32-209 did not result in the decriminalization of dangerous drugs. The Legislature intended the original five schedules to be effective until the Board of Pharmacists (now Board of Pharmacy) and the Department of Health and Environmental Sciences (now Department of Public Health and Human Services) carry out their statutory duty. St. v. Meader, 184 M 32, 601 P2d 386 (1979).

Finding Marijuana Hallucinogenic — Unnecessary: Marijuana is grouped with hallucinogenic drugs, but this does not call for the trier of fact to make a specific finding as to its hallucinogenic capabilities. The Legislature has made that determination. The determination for the trier of fact is whether the substance introduced at trial is in fact marijuana, as defined by 50-32-101. St. v. Petko, 177 M 229, 581 P2d 425 (1978), followed in St. v. Farnsworth, 240 M 328, 783 P2d 1365, 46 St. Rep. 2165 (1989).

Definitions — Application to Montana Dangerous Drug Act: Montana does not have two separate drug acts in force; sections 54-301 through 54-327, R.C.M. 1947 (now in Title 50, ch. 32), were intended to amend and be included as part of Montana Dangerous Drug Act, and definitions found in this section apply to Title 45, ch. 9, MCA. State ex rel. Lance v. District Court, 168 M 297, 542 P2d 1211 (1975).

Federal Drug Law Not to Preempt Montana Drug Law: Federal Controlled Substances Act, 21 U.S.C. §903, does not preempt Montana law on narcotic drugs, Title 54, R.C.M. 1947 (now Title 45, ch. 9, and Title 50, ch. 32, MCA). State ex rel. Lance v. District Court, 168 M 297, 542 P2d 1211 (1975).

Commissioners' Note

The Act vests the authority to administer its provisions in the appropriate person or agency within the State. The "appropriate" person or agency may be one or more persons, or one or more agencies, or a combination. The enacting State should designate that person or agency which has the means to implement, enforce, and regulate the provisions of the Act. For example, authority could be vested in the Office of the Attorney General, a Department of Health, a Division of Public Safety, or such other agency within the State responsible for regulating and enforcing the drug laws. An alternative might be a division of authority whereby one agency might be responsible for controlling drugs under this Article, another agency might be designated to regulate the legitimate industry under Article III, and still another agency might be charged with enforcement. In any event, the ultimate authority for determining the appropriate person or agency is vested in the enacting State.

To bring a substance under control through the administrative procedures, the designated State authority will make findings with respect to the eight criteria hereinafter enumerated and issue an order controlling the given substance, if it has a potential for abuse. To avoid potential State Constitutional problems, as well as allegations of improper legislative delegation of authority, a procedure has been set out which will require substances controlled by Federal laws to be controlled under the State law after the designated authority is notified and after the expiration of thirty days from the date of publication in the Federal Register of a final order controlling the substance under Federal law. However, the designated authority in the State may object to inclusion of the substance under this Act. It must give public notice of its objections and afford an opportunity for any interested party to be heard on the matter. The designated authority makes a final decision based upon that hearing, which is considered final unless specifically acted upon in a contrary manner by the legislature. If the designated authority publicly objects to inclusion of a substance under the controls of this Act, control is automatically stayed pending the outcome of the hearing and the designated authority's final decision. Once a final decision is rendered controlling the substance, the stay automatically terminates and the substance is deemed controlled under this Act.

The eight criteria to be considered with regard to a substance are as follows:

Section 201 [see compiler's comment] sets out the criteria to be considered for the control and classification of drugs into the several schedules. These criteria consist of the degree of their abuse potential, known effect, harmfulness and level of accepted medical use. All controlled substances are contained in either Schedule I, II, III, IV or V. This classification achieves one of the main objectives of the Uniform Act, which is to create a coordinated, codified system of drug control and regulation.

The Act recognizes that some States have had more stringent laws relating to substances than did the former Federal laws. The Uniform Act follows the federal Controlled Substances Act and lists all of the controlled substances in five schedules which are identical with the Federal law. The Uniform Act is not intended to prevent a State from adding or removing substances from the schedules, or from reclassifying substances from one schedule to another, provided the procedures specified in Section 201 are followed.

(1) Its actual or relative potential for abuse—

These are the criteria which will be used most often to control drugs and will provide the basis for the greatest controversy. The term "potential for abuse" is found in the definition of a "depressant or stimulant drug" in the Drug Control Amendments of 1965 (21 U.S.C. 201(v)) and is characterized further in the regulations (21 CFR 166.2(e)) promulgated under those regulations as follows:

"The Director of the Bureau of Narcotics and Dangerous Drugs may determine that a substance has a potential for abuse because of its depressant or stimulant effect on the central nervous system or its hallucinogenic effect if:

"(1) There is evidence that individuals are taking the drug or drugs containing such a substance in amounts sufficient to create a hazard to their health or to the safety of other individuals or of the community; or

"(2) There is significant diversion of the drug or drugs containing such a substance from legitimate drug channels; or

"(3) Individuals are taking the drug or drugs containing such a substance on their own initiative rather than on the basis of medical advice from a practitioner licensed by law to administer such drugs in the course of his professional practice; or

"(4) The drug or drugs containing such a substance are new drugs so related in their action to a drug or drugs already listed as having a potential for abuse to make it likely that the drug will have the same potentiality for abuse as such drugs, thus making it reasonable to assume that there may be significant diversions from legitimate channels, significant use contrary to or without medical advice, or that it has a substantial capability of creating hazards to the health of the user or to the safety of the community."

These regulations follow and extend the suggestions contained in House Report No. 130, 89th Congress, First Session, page 7 (1965).

The report went further in its discussion of the "potential" aspect of the term. It stated that it did not intend that potential for abuse be determined on the basis of "isolated or occasional non-therapeutic purposes." The House Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee felt that there must exist "a substantial potential for the occurrence of significant diversions from legitimate channels, significant use by individuals contrary to professional advice, or substantial capability of creating hazards to the health of the user or the safety of the community." (at page 7)

There are two points that should be emphasized in this definition. First, the House Committee was speaking of "potential" rather than "actual" abuse. In considering a drug for control, it would not be necessary to show that abuse presently exists but only that there are indications of a potential for abuse. This is borne out by the Committee's statement that "the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare should not be required to wait until a number of lives have been destroyed or substantial problems have already arisen before designating a drug as subject to controls of the bill." (at page 7). Thus, the incidence of present abuse is not the test which must be applied. The test is a determination of future or potential abuse. The second point of emphasis is that in speaking of "substantial" potential the term "substantial" means more than a mere scintilla of isolated abuse, but less than a preponderance. Therefore, documentation that, say, several hundred thousand dosage units of a drug have been diverted would be "substantial" evidence of abuse despite the fact that tens of millions of dosage units of that drug are legitimately used in the same time period. The normal way in which such diversion is shown is by accountability audits of the legitimate sources of distribution, such as manufacturers, wholesalers, pharmacies and doctors.

Misuse of a drug in suicides and attempted suicides, as well as injuries resulting from unsupervised use also would be regarded as indicative of a drug's potential for abuse.

(2) Scientific evidence of its pharmacological effects—

The state of knowledge with respect to the uses of a specific drug are, of course, major considerations, e. g., it is vital to know whether or not a drug has an hallucinogenic effect if it is to be controlled because of that effect.

(3) The statement of current scientific knowledge regarding the substance—

Criteria (2) and (3) are closely related. However, (2) is primarily interested in pharmacological effects and (3) deals with all scientific knowledge with respect to the substance.

(4) Its history and current pattern of abuse—

To determine whether or not a drug should be controlled, the designated State authority must know the pattern of abuse of that substance, including the social, economic and ecological characteristics of the segments of the population involved in such abuse.

(5) The scope, duration, and significance of abuse—

Not only must the designated State authority know the pattern of abuse, but it must know whether the abuse is widespread. It must also know whether it is a passing fad, like smoking banana peels, or whether it is a significant chronic abuse problem like heroin addiction. In reaching this decision, the State authority should consider the economics of regulation and enforcement attendant to such a decision. In addition, it should be aware of the social significance and impact of such a decision upon those people, especially the young, that would be affected by it.

(6) What, if any, risk there is to the public health—

The designated State authority must have been the best available knowledge of the pharmacological properties of any drug under consideration. If a drug creates no danger to the public health, it would be inappropriate to control the drug under this Act.

(7) Its psychic or physiological dependence liability—

There must be an assessment of the extent to which a drug is physically addictive or psychologically habit forming, if such information is known.

(8) Whether the substance is an immediate precursor of a substance already controlled—

This criterion allows inclusion of immediate precursors on this basis alone into the appropriate schedule and thus safeguards against possibilities of clandestine manufacture.

The overall intent of this Section is to create reasonable flexibility within the Uniform Act so that, as new substances are discovered or found to have an abuse potential, they can speedily be brought under control without constant resort to the legislature. Such flexibility will allow the laws to keep in step with new trends in drug abuse and new scientific information. States should consider establishing a Scientific Advisory Committee consisting of leading medical and pharmaceutical professionals to advise the appropriate person or agency on control of substances.

This Section [§301] will permit a State to cover the costs of actual registration and control by charging reasonable fees. However, the Section does not permit a State to charge exorbitant fees as a means of fully implementing the regulatory provisions of the Act and thereby avoiding the need for additional State appropriations.

"The Director of the Bureau of Narcotics and Dangerous Drugs may determine that a substance has a potential for abuse because of its depressant or stimulant effect on the central nervous system or its hallucinogenic effect if:

"(1) There is evidence that individuals are taking the drug or drugs containing such a substance in amounts sufficient to create a hazard to their health or to the safety of other individuals or of the community; or

"(2) There is significant diversion of the drug or drugs containing such a substance from legitimate drug channels; or

Commissioners' Note

[Sections 50-32-105 and 50-32-106], setting out the education and research provisions, [are] designed to make it clear that education and research are an integral part of the total law enforcement effort. Broad language is used in order to provide maximum latitude.

Of primary importance are subsections [(3) and (4) of 50-32-106] authorizing persons engaged in legitimate research to withhold the identities of research subjects and allowing the State to authorize possession and distribution of controlled substances. These provisions will tie into proposed Federal law and will allow legitimate researchers to carry on much needed research without fear of exposing either themselves or their research subjects to criminal prosecution.

It should be noted that a grant of Federal immunity would preempt any State grant or denial of immunity. However, the converse would not be true, and a researcher in possession of controlled substances under a State grant of immunity could be prosecuted under Federal law if the Federal government elected not to confer immunity. However, it is unlikely that this situation will arise.

Scheduling of Dangerous Drugs

Part Administrative Rules

ARM 24.174.1412 Additions, deletions, and rescheduling of dangerous drugs.

Part Case Notes

Possession of Each Drug in Schedules a Separate Crime: It was proper for the County Attorney to charge defendant with three counts for possession of three prohibited drugs. The Legislature intended to provide a distinct crime for each of the drugs listed in the schedules. St. v. Meader, 184 M 32, 601 P2d 386 (1979).

Failure to Republish Schedule: Failure of the Board and the Department to revise and republish schedules as required by 50-32-209 did not result in the decriminalization of dangerous drugs. The Legislature intended the original five schedules to be effective until the Board of Pharmacists and the Department of Health and Environmental Sciences (now Department of Public Health and Human Services) carry out their statutory duty. St. v. Meader, 184 M 32, 601 P2d 386 (1979), followed in St. v. Briner, 253 M 158, 831 P2d 1365, 49 St. Rep. 402 (1992).

50-32-201. General criteria to be considered.

Commissioners' Note

The Act vests the authority to administer its provisions in the appropriate person or agency within the State. The "appropriate" person or agency may be one or more persons, or one or more agencies, or a combination. The enacting State should designate that person or agency which has the means to implement, enforce, and regulate the provisions of the Act. For example, authority could be vested in the Office of the Attorney General, a Department of Health, a Division of Public Safety, or such other agency within the State responsible for regulating and enforcing the drug laws. An alternative might be a division of authority whereby one agency might be responsible for controlling drugs under this Article, another agency might be designated to regulate the legitimate industry under Article III, and still another agency might be charged with enforcement. In any event, the ultimate authority for determining the appropriate person or agency is vested in the enacting State.

To bring a substance under control through the administrative procedures, the designated State authority will make findings with respect to the eight criteria hereinafter enumerated and issue an order controlling the given substance, if it has a potential for abuse. To avoid potential State Constitutional problems, as well as allegations of improper legislative delegation of authority, a procedure has been set out which will require substances controlled by Federal laws to be controlled under the State law after the designated authority is notified and after the expiration of thirty days from the date of publication in the Federal Register of a final order controlling the substance under Federal law. However, the designated authority in the State may object to inclusion of the substance under this Act. It must give public notice of its objections and afford an opportunity for any interested party to be heard on the matter. The designated authority makes a final decision based upon that hearing, which is considered final unless specifically acted upon in a contrary manner by the legislature. If the designated authority publicly objects to inclusion of a substance under the controls of this Act, control is automatically stayed pending the outcome of the hearing and the designated authority's final decision. Once a final decision is rendered controlling the substance, the stay automatically terminates and the substance is deemed controlled under this Act.

The eight criteria to be considered with regard to a substance are as follows:

Section 201 [see compiler's comment] sets out the criteria to be considered for the control and classification of drugs into the several schedules. These criteria consist of the degree of their abuse potential, known effect, harmfulness and level of accepted medical use. All controlled substances are contained in either Schedule I, II, III, IV or V. This classification achieves one of the main objectives of the Uniform Act, which is to create a coordinated, codified system of drug control and regulation.

The Act recognizes that some States have had more stringent laws relating to substances than did the former Federal laws. The Uniform Act follows the Federal Controlled Substances Act and lists all of the controlled substances in five schedules which are identical with the Federal law. The Uniform Act is not intended to prevent a State from adding or removing substances from the schedules, or from reclassifying substances from one schedule to another, provided the procedures specified in Section 201 are followed.

(1) Its actual or relative potential for abuse—

These are the criteria which will be used most often to control drugs and will provide the basis for the greatest controversy. The term "potential for abuse" is found in the definition of a "depressant or stimulant drug" in the Drug Control Amendments of 1965 (21 U.S.C. 201(v)) and is characterized further in the regulations (21 CFR 166.2(e)) promulgated under those regulations as follows:

"The Director of the Bureau of Narcotics and Dangerous Drugs may determine that a substance has a potential for abuse because of its depressant or stimulant effect on the central nervous system or its hallucinogenic effect if:

"(1) There is evidence that individuals are taking the drug or drugs containing such a substance in amounts sufficient to create a hazard to their health or to the safety of other individuals or of the community; or

"(2) There is significant diversion of the drug or drugs containing such a substance from legitimate drug channels; or

"(3) Individuals are taking the drug or drugs containing such a substance on their own initiative rather than on the basis of medical advice from a practitioner licensed by law to administer such drugs in the course of his professional practice; or

"(4) The drug or drugs containing such a substance are new drugs so related in their action to a drug or drugs already listed as having a potential for abuse to make it likely that the drug will have the same potentiality for abuse as such drugs, thus making it reasonable to assume that there may be significant diversions from legitimate channels, significant use contrary to or without medical advice, or that it has a substantial capability of creating hazards to the health of the user or to the safety of the community."

These regulations follow and extend the suggestions contained in House Report No. 130, 89th Congress, First Session, page 7 (1965).

The report went further in its discussion of the "potential" aspect of the term. It stated that it did not intend that potential for abuse be determined on the basis of "isolated or occasional non-therapeutic purposes." The House Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee felt that there must exist "a substantial potential for the occurrence of significant diversions from legitimate channels, significant use by individuals contrary to professional advice, or substantial capability of creating hazards to the health of the user or the safety of the community." (at page 7)

There are two points that should be emphasized in this definition. First, the House Committee was speaking of "potential" rather than "actual" abuse. In considering a drug for control, it would not be necessary to show that abuse presently exists but only that there are indications of a potential for abuse. This is borne out by the Committee's statement that "the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare should not be required to wait until a number of lives have been destroyed or substantial problems have already arisen before designating a drug as subject to controls of the bill." (at page 7). Thus, the incidence of present abuse is not the test which must be applied. The test is a determination of future or potential abuse. The second point of emphasis is that in speaking of "substantial" potential the term "substantial" means more than a mere scintilla of isolated abuse, but less than a preponderance. Therefore, documentation that, say, several hundred thousand dosage units of a drug have been diverted would be "substantial" evidence of abuse despite the fact that tens of millions of dosage units of that drug are legitimately used in the same time period. The normal way in which such diversion is shown is by accountability audits of the legitimate sources of distribution, such as manufacturers, wholesalers, pharmacies and doctors.

Misuse of a drug in suicides and attempted suicides, as well as injuries resulting from unsupervised use also would be regarded as indicative of a drug's potential for abuse.

(2) Scientific evidence of its pharmacological effects—

The state of knowledge with respect to the uses of a specific drug are, of course, major considerations, e. g., it is vital to know whether or not a drug has an hallucinogenic effect if it is to be controlled because of that effect.

(3) The statement of current scientific knowledge regarding the substance—

Criteria (2) and (3) are closely related. However, (2) is primarily interested in pharmacological effects and (3) deals with all scientific knowledge with respect to the substance.

(4) Its history and current pattern of abuse—

To determine whether or not a drug should be controlled, the designated State authority must know the pattern of abuse of that substance, including the social, economic and ecological characteristics of the segments of the population involved in such abuse.

(5) The scope, duration, and significance of abuse—

Not only must the designated State authority know the pattern of abuse, but it must know whether the abuse is widespread. It must also know whether it is a passing fad, like smoking banana peels, or whether it is a significant chronic abuse problem like heroin addiction. In reaching this decision, the State authority should consider the economics of regulation and enforcement attendant to such a decision. In addition, it should be aware of the social significance and impact of such a decision upon those people, especially the young, that would be affected by it.

(6) What, if any, risk there is to the public health—

The designated State authority must have been the best available knowledge of the pharmacological properties of any drug under consideration. If a drug creates no danger to the public health, it would be inappropriate to control the drug under this Act.

(7) Its psychic or physiological dependence liability—

There must be an assessment of the extent to which a drug is physically addictive or psychologically habit forming, if such information is known.

(8) Whether the substance is an immediate precursor of a substance already controlled—

This criterion allows inclusion of immediate precursors on this basis alone into the appropriate schedule and thus safeguards against possibilities of clandestine manufacture.

The overall intent of this Section is to create reasonable flexibility within the Uniform Act so that, as new substances are discovered or found to have an abuse potential, they can speedily be brought under control without constant resort to the legislature. Such flexibility will allow the laws to keep in step with new trends in drug abuse and new scientific information. States should consider establishing a Scientific Advisory Committee consisting of leading medical and pharmaceutical professionals to advise the appropriate person or agency on control of substances.

Sale of Over-the-Counter Nasal Products — No Exclusion of Methamphetamine: Barker was convicted of possession of methamphetamine but sought postconviction relief based on the argument that because over-the-counter nasal products contain methamphetamine, the Board of Pharmacy had wrongly failed to exclude the drug from a schedule. The Supreme Court concluded that the District Court did not err when it failed to grant Barker's petition for postconviction relief because Barker could not demonstrate that either state or federal law allows the over-the-counter sale of the drug itself. The Supreme Court also noted that this same argument had been rejected in U.S. v. Caperell, 938 F2d 975 (9th Cir. 1991). St. v. Barker, 257 M 31, 847 P2d 300, 50 St. Rep. 147 (1993).

Case Notes

Failure to Republish Schedules: Failure to revise and republish schedules did not result in the decriminalization of dangerous drugs. The Legislature did not intend the Board of Pharmacists to have the power, by inaction, to decriminalize the possession of all types of drugs and substances. The Legislature intended the original five schedules to be effective until the Board and the Department of Health and Environmental Sciences (now Department of Public Health and Human Services) carry out their statutory duty. St. v. Meader, 184 M 32, 601 P2d 386 (1979), followed in St. v. Briner, 253 M 158, 831 P2d 1365, 49 St. Rep. 402 (1992).

50-32-221. Criteria for placement of drug in Schedule I.

Commissioners' Note

Based upon these criteria, hallucinogenic substances and certain narcotic substances are included in the same schedule ([50-32-222]). This is primarily because both groups of drugs have no accepted use in the United States and both have a high potential for abuse. However, hallucinogenic substances in Schedule I are not treated [in the Uniform Act] in the same manner for penalty purposes as narcotic substances. (See Prohibited Acts A, Section 401 [not adopted in Montana].)

Experimental substances found to have a potential for abuse in early testing will also be included in Schedule I. When those substances are accepted by the Federal Food and Drug Administration as being safe and effective, they will then be considered to have an accepted medical use for treatment in the United States, and thus, will be eligible to be shifted to an appropriate schedule based upon the criteria set out in [50-32-223, 50-32-225, 50-32-228, and 50-32-231].

Annual Registration

Part Compiler's Comments

Preamble: The preamble attached to Ch. 273, L. 1999, provided: "WHEREAS, Title 50, chapter 32, MCA, requires the Department of Commerce to administer a program under rules adopted by the Board of Pharmacy providing for the registration of persons and institutions that may manufacture, distribute, or administer dangerous drugs; and

WHEREAS, it is the registration system under Title 50, chapter 32, part 3, MCA, that allows hospitals, physicians, and other persons and health care institutions that have legitimate uses for dangerous drugs to possess or administer those drugs; and

WHEREAS, section 50-32-101(12), MCA, provides for a category of a possessor of dangerous drugs known as a "distributor", who is a person or facility that receives dangerous drugs from one registered source and makes them available to another person who is also registered under the law; and

WHEREAS, institutions, such as hospitals and other health care facilities, that do not themselves prescribe or administer dangerous drugs but do receive those drugs from one source and make them available to a physician to administer to a patient are registered pursuant to Title 50, chapter 32, part 3, MCA, as a "distributor", as defined in section 50-32-101(12), MCA; and

WHEREAS, Montana is seeing the development of new and expanding types of health care facilities intended to fill the growing needs of a category of patients who require surgery but do not require hospitalization and who may therefore have surgery performed at an ambulatory surgical facility, soon to be called an "outpatient center for surgical services" pursuant to the terms of Senate Bill No. 116; and

WHEREAS, few if any of the existing ambulatory surgical facilities have themselves been registered for the possession of dangerous drugs because most existing facilities are operationally connected to hospitals or physicians who already have a registration issued by the Department of Commerce; and

WHEREAS, the rules adopted by the Board of Pharmacy pursuant to section 50-32-103(2), MCA, and administered by the Department of Commerce do not provide for the registration of ambulatory surgical facilities or outpatient centers for surgical services as distributors or any other class of registered entity; and

WHEREAS, the registration of ambulatory surgical facilities or outpatient centers for surgical services to allow the facilities or centers to make drugs available for preoperation, operation, and postoperation surgical purposes will provide health care consumers with greater options for the performance of outpatient surgery; and

WHEREAS, the registration of ambulatory surgical facilities or outpatient centers for surgical services will not increase the possibility that dangerous drugs will be used by unauthorized persons because an ambulatory surgical facility or outpatient center for surgical services must still receive those drugs from a registered distributor and because physicians or other persons registered to administer or prescribe drugs will still need to administer or prescribe the drugs possessed by an ambulatory surgical facility or outpatient facility for surgical services."

50-32-301. Annual registration required for manufacturer, distributor, or dispenser.

Commissioners' Note

This Section requires any person who engages in, or intends to engage in, the manufacture, distribution, or dispensing of controlled substances to be registered by the State. Practitioners who administer, as that term is defined in [50-32-101(1)], or who prescribe, will be required to register; however, under [other] sections they may be exempt from the record-keeping requirements. By registering every individual dealing with controlled substances, the State will know who is responsible for a substance and who is dealing in these substances. The tighter registration requirements imposed by this Section are designed to close the gaps in State laws and thus eliminate many of these sources of diversion, both actual and potential.

Common and contract carriers, warehousemen, ultimate users, and agents of registrants are specifically exempted from the registration requirements since to require otherwise would be extremely burdensome and afford little increase in protection against diversion.

Annual registration is called for so that a licensee can be screened and the registration lists purified should the need arise. In addition, the annual registration requirement will be a form of check on persons authorized to deal in controlled substances.

50-32-306. Criteria for registration of manufacturers and distributors.

Commissioners' Note

[Sections 50-32-306 through 50-32-308 set] out the criteria under which a State authority registers persons to engage in the various activities concerning controlled substances. There is required a showing by the applicant of the maintenance of adequate safeguards against diversion, of compliance with State and local laws, and of his previous experience in the manufacture or distribution of such substances. These criteria are almost identical to those which the Attorney General must consider in registering an applicant under the Federal Controlled Substances Act except for antitrust considerations, which were not considered applicable to the State control procedures. Thus, any particular applicant need meet only one set of criteria for both Federal and State registration.

In addition, registration under the Federal Controlled Substances Act will be deemed sufficient for registration under State law. Since the criteria for Federal and State registration are virtually identical, nothing would be served by requiring a registrant under Federal law to go through a similar procedure in registering under State law. Wasteful duplication would be the only result. Under the proposed system, a single form will suffice to register an applicant under both State and Federal law.

Practitioners are to be registered to prescribe or dispense substances in Schedules II through V, comprising all substances with recognized medical uses, if they are authorized to prescribe or dispense under the laws of the State. If those practitioners wish to conduct research in nonnarcotic substances in Schedules II through V, the State authority has within its discretion the right to require, or not require, a separate registration. It is felt that such permissive language will be most beneficial to those States who wish to keep close tabs on all those individuals who conduct research within their borders.

Practitioners who are registered under Federal law to conduct research with respect to Schedule I substances are permitted to conduct that research in a State solely upon notification to the appropriate State authority of a valid Federal registration.

By tying the State and Federal systems together, different "paper" requirements will be avoided and wasteful duplication eliminated. However, if a State sees a need for any additional recordkeeping or inventory requirements, this provision provides the appropriate State agency with the authority to promulgate those rules.

This Section is also intended to exempt those individuals exempted by Federal law from recordkeeping and inventory requirements.

50-32-310. Inspections authorized.

Commissioners' Note

The purpose of this Section is to codify certain recent United States Supreme Court decisions, in particular Camara v. Municipal Court of the City and County of San Francisco, 387 U.S. 523 (1967), See v. City of Seattle, 387 U.S. 541 (1967), and Colonnade Catering Corp. v. U. S., 397 U.S. 72 (1970), with regard to inspection warrants. [See, also, Kramer Grocery v. U. S., 1968, 294 F.Supp. 65; U. S. v. Stinack Sales Co., 1968, 387 F.2d 849.] The Section sets out in very careful terms the procedures and restrictions for obtaining and using an administrative inspection warrant. This is of vital importance to the States since they are involved in the regulation of the legitimate drug industry and must have the ability to inspect records, books and premises if access to them is denied. By having a carefully delineated code section dealing with administrative inspection warrants, law enforcement officers will be more certain of what is needed to obtain them and the courts can apply a uniform standard. Perhaps even more important, the industry being inspected will have more certainty as to its rights and obligations in this area.

It should be noted that the Supreme Court, in Camara v. Municipal Court spoke of the requirement of "probable cause" for issuance of an administrative inspection warrant. But the Court was not, however, speaking in terms of criminal probable cause, which would require a specific knowledge of the condition of the particular building to be inspected. Instead, rejecting the criminal probable cause argument, it required merely a valid public interest in the effective enforcement of a particular public health or safety act which justified the intrusion contemplated.

Although this Section codifies the Court's view for administrative inspection warrants, it in no way affects criminal probable cause as that phrase is defined under present criminal statutes or case law.

Finally, it should be noted that while Section 402(a)(4) [not adopted in Montana] makes it a violation of the Act to refuse entry into any premises for inspection, it is contemplated that such inspection will have been authorized under the rules set out in this Section.

Law Review Articles

The Constitutionality of Civil Inspections, 21 Mont. L. Rev. 195 (Spring 1960).

50-32-311. Revocation or suspension of registration.

Commissioners' Note

This Section sets out the grounds upon which a State authority may revoke or suspend a registration. Subsection [(1)] sets out the criteria upon which a registration can be revoked or suspended during the year in which that particular registration is in force. In denial of registration renewal situations for manufacturers or distributors, the criteria in this subsection should not be used. Instead, the State authority should apply the broader criteria set out in [50-32-306] relating to initial registration.

Subsection [(2)] allows the State authority in its discretion to limit the revocation or suspension of a registration to a particular substance rather than revoking or suspending the whole registration. This will be especially effective where, for example, a manufacturer committed a criminal violation, but certain mitigating circumstances militate against removing his full registration. Instead, his right to manufacture a particular substance could be suspended or revoked. This would put him out of the business of manufacturing in the substance or schedule in which he committed the violation, but would not totally remove his livelihood.

Subsection [(3)] relates to forfeitures of controlled substances where the registrant who has the right to possess those substances has his registration revoked. This Section has purposely been drafted to be permissive rather than mandatory. Thus, for example, if the registration of a sole medical practitioner or a community pharmacy in a small town were revoked, the State authority could in its discretion allow the revoked registrant to sell those substances to a new owner-registrant so that the inhabitants of the particular town would not have to go without needed pharmaceutical supplies.

Upon a final order of revocation of a registration, the State must promptly notify the Federal Bureau of Narcotics and Dangerous Drugs. Such a provision is necessary since revocation of a State registration is grounds for denial, suspension, or revocation of a Federal registration.

50-32-312. Procedure for denial, suspension, revocation of, or refusal to renew registration.

Commissioners' Note

This Section requires the State authority to serve upon a registrant an order to show cause why his registration should not be revoked or suspended or his registration renewal refused prior to taking such action. The order will contain enough information to fully apprise the registrant of the charges against him and will be served at least 30 days before his current registration expires. All proceedings will be conducted under appropriate administrative procedures. If, during the pendency of an administrative hearing to deny a renewal registration, the registration runs out, this Section keeps the old registration in force until the administrative hearing is completed.

Subsection [(2)] allows the State authority, in cases of imminent danger to the public health or safety, to suspend the registration simultaneously with the institution of proceedings to revoke, suspend, or refuse a renewal. Such an emergency situation can occur when, for example, a practitioner, knowing that action is being taken to revoke his registration, begins to buy and divert large quantities of controlled substances. Rather than having to wait until all administrative proceedings have been completed and allow substantial diversion of these substances, the State authority may act immediately to suspend the registration. It may then place all controlled substances under seal until the administrative hearing is completed.

However, those substances listed in section 1 can be used in the manufacture of several different dangerous drugs, including amphetamine, methamphetamine and phencyclidine. The intent of the legislation requiring reporting is to monitor commercial sales of those chemicals that can be readily used to produce dangerous drugs. Two purposes will be served by mandatory reporting. First of all, it will deter those who do not have a legitimate need for the chemicals from making purchases, knowing that the purchase will be reported. Secondly, by monitoring the sales the Department of Justice will be "tipped" to large purchases by illegitimate purchasers thereby preventing the possible manufacture and consumption of a controlled drug."

Incorporation Into Existing Law: Sections 50-32-401 through 50-32-405 were enacted without any codification instructions. The apparent intent of the Legislature was that they become part of the Title 50, ch. 32, and the Code Commissioner has codified them accordingly. This arrangement may affect other sections in ch. 32, including 50-32-103. See 1-11-103(4).

Preamble: The preamble attached to Ch. 492, L. 1997, provided: "WHEREAS, the Legislature finds that delays in licensing board responses to complaints of misconduct by licensees and unlicensed practice that result in frustration on behalf of the public, licensees, and boards is caused by a lack of personnel to assist with compliance issues; and

WHEREAS, licensing boards collect and accumulate sufficient funds from the fees charged to licensees to meet the cost of compliance and enforcement personnel, but these same boards often lack the authority to expend the funds that they collect; and

WHEREAS, the delayed processing and the accumulating complaint backlog have a deleterious effect on the productivity and reputation of the licensees; and

WHEREAS, the Legislature finds that certain licensing boards need to be granted temporary spending authority to address the delayed processing and accumulated complaint backlog; and

WHEREAS, a uniformly flexible approach to license renewal scheduling would also reduce frustration on the part of licensees and the public that they serve; and

WHEREAS, inflexible examination dates for license applicants in the plumbing and electrical fields have caused undue hardship with no discernable public benefit; and

WHEREAS, the Committee on Business and Labor desires to alleviate these and other related problems by appropriating funds for certain professional and occupational boards that need additional compliance specialists, by allowing the Department of Commerce [function now in Department of Labor and Industry] to establish license renewal dates by rule, and by allowing electrical and plumbing apprentices to take the examination required for licensure before the apprenticeships expire."

1995 Amendment: Chapter 514 in (1) substituted "commerce" for "justice". Amendment effective July 1, 1995.

1993 Amendment: Chapter 396 in (1), near beginning after "for", substituted "a license and any endorsements" for "licenses, permits, or certificates"; in (2), before "issue", inserted "annually" and after "license" inserted "and endorsement"; in (2)(a), before "services", inserted "sales or" and after "licensed" substituted "and endorsed" for "and who pays the required fee"; in (2)(b) substituted "submits satisfactory proof that the applicant is insured to engage in the business covered by the license and endorsement or endorsements" for "The department shall issue a certificate of registration to an applicant who scores a passing grade on an examination devised by the department and who pays the required fee"; in (3) substituted language requiring Department to issue endorsement on passage of examination and to annually renew endorsements upon payment of fee for (4) that read: "(4) The department shall issue a sales permit to an applicant who submits the information required by the department on the application form, who submits satisfactory proof that he deals only in equipment that meets the standards and regulations of the department, and who pays the required fee"; and made minor changes in style.

Applicability: Section 10, Ch. 396, L. 1993, provided: "Licenses issued under 50-39-101 through 50-39-105 [50-39-105 now repealed] before October 1, 1993, expire on December 31, 1993, after which those holding such licenses are subject to the provisions of [this act]."

2005 Amendment: Chapter 268 substituted current text concerning legislative findings and purpose for the part for former text that read: "The legislature, mindful of its constitutional obligations under Article II, section 3, and Article IX of the Montana constitution, has enacted the Montana Clean Indoor Air Act of 1979. It is the legislature's intent that the requirements of this part provide adequate remedies for the protection of the environmental life support system. The purpose of this part is to protect the health of nonsmokers in public places and to provide for reserved areas in some public places for those who choose to smoke." Amendment effective October 1, 2005.

Preamble: The preamble attached to Ch. 268, L. 2005, provided: "WHEREAS, numerous studies have found that tobacco smoke is a major contributor to indoor air pollution and that breathing secondhand smoke, also known as environmental tobacco smoke, is a cause of disease in healthy nonsmokers, including diseases such as heart disease, stroke, respiratory disease, and lung cancer; and

WHEREAS, the National Cancer Institute determined in 1999 that secondhand smoke is responsible for the early deaths of up to 65,000 Americans annually; and

WHEREAS, The National Toxicology Program of the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services has listed secondhand smoke as a known carcinogen; and

WHEREAS, a study of hospital admissions for acute myocardial infarction in Helena, Montana, before, during, and after a local ordinance eliminating smoking in workplaces and public places was in effect, has determined that laws to enforce smoke-free workplaces and public places may be associated with a reduction in morbidity from heart disease; and

WHEREAS, the U.S. Surgeon General has determined that the simple separation of smokers and nonsmokers within the same air space may reduce, but does not eliminate, the exposure of nonsmokers to secondhand smoke; and

WHEREAS, the Environmental Protection Agency has determined, as of the introduction date of this bill, that secondhand smoke cannot be reduced to safe levels in businesses by high rates of ventilation and that air cleaners, which are only capable of filtering the particulate matter and odors in smoke, do not eliminate the known toxins in secondhand smoke; and

WHEREAS, it has been determined by the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention that the risk of acute myocardial infarction and coronary heart disease associated with exposure to tobacco smoke is nonlinear at low doses, increasing rapidly with relatively small doses, such as those received from secondhand smoke or actively smoking one or two cigarettes a day; and

WHEREAS, the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention warns that all patients at increased risk of coronary heart disease or with known coronary artery disease should avoid all indoor environments that permit smoking; and

WHEREAS, numerous economic analyses examining restaurant and hotel receipts and controlling for economic variables have shown either no difference or a positive economic impact after enactment of laws requiring workplaces to be smoke-free; and

WHEREAS, smoking is a potential cause of fires, and cigarette and cigar burns and ash stains on merchandise and fixtures cause economic damage to businesses; and

WHEREAS, creation of smoke-free workplaces is sound economic policy and provides the maximum level of employee health and safety."

Nonseverability: Section 13, Ch. 268, L. 2005, was a nonseverability clause.

2003 Amendment: Chapter 361 inserted first two sentences relating to constitutional obligations and legislative intent. Amendment effective April 16, 2003.

Preamble: The preamble attached to Ch. 361, L. 2003, provided: "WHEREAS, Article II, section 3, of the Montana Constitution enumerates certain inalienable individual rights, including the right to a clean and healthful environment, the right of pursuing life's basic necessities, the right of enjoying and defending an individual's life and liberty, the right of acquiring, possessing, and protecting property, and the right of seeking individual safety, health, and happiness in all lawful ways; and

WHEREAS, the constitutionally enumerated rights are by their very nature bound to result in competing interests in specific fact situations; and

WHEREAS, Article IX, section 1, of the Montana Constitution provides that the state and each person shall maintain and improve a clean and healthful environment in Montana for present and future generations and directs the Legislature to provide for the administration and enforcement of this duty and also directs the Legislature to provide adequate remedies for the protection of the environmental life support system from degradation and to provide adequate remedies to prevent unreasonable depletion and degradation of natural resources; and

WHEREAS, the Legislature has reviewed the intent of the framers of the 1972 Montana Constitution as evidenced in the verbatim transcripts of the constitutional convention; and

WHEREAS, there is no indication that one enumerated inalienable right is intended to supersede other inalienable rights, including the right to use property in all lawful means; and

WHEREAS, the Legislature, mindful of its constitutional obligation to provide for the administration and enforcement of the constitution, has enacted a comprehensive set of laws to accomplish the goals of the constitution, including the Montana Clean Indoor Air Act of 1979, Title 50, chapter 40, part 1, MCA; the Montana Environmental Policy Act, Title 75, chapter 1, parts 1 through 3, MCA; the Clean Air Act of Montana, Title 75, chapter 2, parts 1 through 4, MCA; water quality laws, Title 75, chapter 5, MCA; The Natural Streambed and Land Preservation Act of 1975, Title 75, chapter 7, part 1, MCA; The Montana Solid Waste Management Act, Title 75, chapter 10, part 2, MCA; The Montana Hazardous Waste Act, Title 75, chapter 10, part 4, MCA; the Comprehensive Environmental Cleanup and Responsibility Act, Title 75, chapter 10, part 7, MCA; the Montana Megalandfill Siting Act, sections 75-10-901 through 75-10-945, MCA; the Montana Underground Storage Tank Installer and Inspector Licensing and Permitting Act, Title 75, chapter 11, part 2, MCA; the Montana Underground Storage Tank Act, Title 75, chapter 11, part 5, MCA; the Montana Major Facility Siting Act, Title 75, chapter 20, MCA; the Open-Space Land and Voluntary Conservation Easement Act, Title 76, chapter 6, MCA; the Environmental Control Easement Act, Title 76, chapter 7, MCA; The Strip and Underground Mine Siting Act, Title 82, chapter 4, part 1, MCA; The Montana Strip and Underground Mine Reclamation Act, Title 82, chapter 4, part 2, MCA; The Opencut Mining Act, Title 82, chapter 4, part 4, MCA; and The Nongame and Endangered Species Conservation Act, Title 87, chapter 5, part 1, MCA."

Severability: Section 39, Ch. 361, L. 2003, was a severability clause.

Retroactive Applicability: Section 41, Ch. 361, L. 2003, provided: "[This act] applies retroactively, within the meaning of 1-2-109, to actions for judicial review or other causes of action challenging the issuance of a permit, petition for review, amendment, license, arbitration, action, certificate, or inspection that are pending but not yet decided on or after [the effective date of this act]." Effective April 16, 2003.

Case Notes

Self-Government Local Governments Not Prohibited From Adopting No-Smoking Ordinances Affecting Gambling Establishments: Former section 7-1-120 (now repealed) provided: "An establishment that has been granted a permit under Title 23, chapter 5, part 6, for the placement of video gambling machines on the premises is exempt from any local government ordinance that is more restrictive than the provisions of Title 50, chapter 40, part 1", which is the Montana Clean Indoor Air Act of 1979. Under Art. XI, sec. 6, Mont. Const., "A local government unit adopting a self-government charter may exercise any power not prohibited by this constitution, law, or charter." To exempt is not to prohibit. A prohibition cuts off the power to act in the first instance. An exemption assumes that there is authority or power to act and grants freedom or immunity from that power. Section 7-1-120 did not effect an express prohibition of self-governing powers. Therefore, it did not preempt any no-smoking ordinances adopted by a self-governing entity. The state argued that it had preempted the area of state-licensed video gambling machines and that city ordinances limiting or prohibiting smoking in buildings open to the public, one ordinance of which expressly applied to premises with state licenses for video gambling machines, were inconsistent with that preemption. Section 7-1-112(5) prohibits a local government with self-government powers from exercising the power to regulate any form of gambling. The cities' clean air ordinances are not an attempt to regulate gambling in contravention of the 7-1-112(5) prohibition; the ordinances regulate clean indoor air, and if that regulation incidentally impacts video gambling machine establishments, that fact does not invalidate the ordinances. The ordinances have incidental impacts on all buildings open to the public. (See 2005 amendment.) Am. Cancer Soc'y v. St., 2004 MT 376, 325 M 70, 103 P3d 1085 (2004).

Chapter Administrative Rules

Title 37, chapter 107, subchapter 1, ARM Marijuana registry — general requirements.

Case Notes

Right to Employment — Selling Medical Marijuana for Profit Not Fundamental Right: The District Court determined that medical marijuana is a legal product in Montana with an established licensing and distribution system and that consequently a statutory prohibition on accepting money for it implicates the fundamental right to pursue employment. On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed the District Court and determined the right to employment does not grant a right to or property interest in any particular job or employment. Moreover, the Legislature, in its exercise of the state's police powers, was permitted to circumscribe a right to protect the public health and welfare. Mont. Cannabis Indus. Ass'n v. St., 2012 MT 201, 366 Mont. 224, 286 P.3d 1161, following Wadsworth v. St., 275 Mont. 287, 911 P.2d 1165 (1996), and Wiser v. St., 2006 MT 20, 331 Mont. 28, 129 P.3d 133.

Right to Privacy — Access to Medical Marijuana Not Fundamental Right: The District Court determined that statutory restrictions on medical marijuana substantially implicated the fundamental right to privacy. On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed the District Court and determined that the right to privacy does not encompass the affirmative right of access to medical marijuana. The Supreme Court reasoned that while the right to privacy is certainly implicated when a statute infringes on a person's ability to obtain or reject a "lawful" medical treatment, it does not follow that the right to privacy is necessarily implicated when a statute regulates a particular medication. Mont. Cannabis Indus. Ass'n v. St., 2012 MT 201, 366 Mont. 224, 286 P.3d 1161, following Wiser v. St., 2006 MT 20, 331 Mont. 28, 129 P.3d 133, and distinguishing Armstrong v. St., 1999 MT 261, 296 Mont. 361, 989 P.2d 364.

Right to Seek Health — Access to Medical Marijuana Not Fundamental Right: The District Court determined that denying medical marijuana providers compensation and limiting the number of cardholders that each provider can serve substantially implicated the fundamental right to seek health in a lawful manner because such restrictions deny access to medical marijuana. On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed the District Court and determined that the right to obtain and reject medical treatment does not give an individual a fundamental affirmative right to access any drug, regardless of its legality. Moreover, the right to seek health is circumscribed by the state's police powers to protect the public's health and welfare. Mont. Cannabis Indus. Ass'n v. St., 2012 MT 201, 366 Mont. 224, 286 P.3d 1161, citing Wiser v. St., 2006 MT 20, 331 Mont. 28, 129 P.3d 133.

Possession of Valid Registry Identification Card at Time of Offense Required for Immunity: Stoner was charged with numerous drug offenses related to the possession and production of marijuana on July 22, 2009. On December 3, 2009, Stoner was issued a qualifying patient registry identification card. Stoner argued in a motion to dismiss at the District Court level that the Medical Marijuana Act (now repealed) did not require a person to possess a registry identification card at the time of the offense. The District Court denied the motion and Stoner appealed. The Supreme Court held that Stoner was required to obtain and be in possession of a valid registry identification card at the time of the offense for which he sought immunity from prosecution. St. v. Stoner, 2012 MT 162, 365 Mont. 465, 285 P.3d 402.

Hashish Not Marijuana — Definitions Harmonized: A medical marijuana card that was issued pursuant to the former Medical Marijuana Act as set forth in 50-46-101 through 50-46-210 (now repealed) did not entitle the defendant to possess hashish, which is specifically differentiated in 50-32-101. The Act was clear and unambiguous on its face, and the District Court's interpretation appropriately harmonized the statutes. St. v. Pirello, 2012 MT 155, 365 Mont. 399, 282 P.3d 662.

Rule of Lenity Not Applicable — Fair Notice That Hashish Not Medical Marijuana: The definitions of "marijuana" and "usable marijuana" were clear and unambiguous under the former Medical Marijuana Act as set forth in 50-46-101 through 50-46-210 (now repealed). Consequently, the defendant had fair notice that possession of hashish was prohibited under the Act and the rule of lenity did not apply. St. v. Pirello, 2012 MT 155, 365 Mont. 399, 282 P.3d 662.

Interpretation of Medical Marijuana Act — Medical Marijuana to Be Obtained From Care Provider Identified on Card — Denial of Motion to Dismiss Criminal Possession of Marijuana Affirmed: The defendant was charged with several counts, including criminal possession of marijuana. At the time of the offense, police found less than 1 ounce on the defendant, who had a valid medical marijuana card. After being found guilty of the offense in Justice's Court, the defendant appealed for a trial de novo in District Court. She also filed a motion to dismiss the possession charge, claiming that because she had a valid card, she could not be prosecuted for possessing less than 1 ounce, even if she did not obtain the marijuana from the provider identified on her card. The District Court denied the motion to dismiss and found her guilty of the charge. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed, ruling that the Medical Marijuana Act (now repealed) did not permit a cardholder to obtain marijuana from anyone other than the registered provider. St. v. Johnson, 2012 MT 101, 365 Mont. 56, 277 P.3d 1232.

Sentencing Conditions May Not Restrict Medical Treatment Authorized by State Law: Nelson was charged with seven drug-related crimes. Nelson suffers from a degenerative disc disorder and has had four surgeries on his back. Nelson had applied with the state to be a qualified patient in Montana's medical marijuana program and to be entitled to the lawful use of medical marijuana. On December 8, 2006, subsequent to being charged with the drug-related crimes, Nelson was accepted into the medical marijuana program, placed on the confidential registry, and issued an identification card indicating his participation in the program. On February 7, 2007, Nelson entered into a plea agreement with the state. In exchange for pleading nolo contendere to criminal possession or manufacture of dangerous drugs, Nelson received a 3-year deferred imposition of sentence, and the state agreed to dismiss the remaining six counts. On February 26, 2007, Nelson appeared before the District Court and formally pleaded no contest to the charge. The District Court asked Nelson's attorney how Nelson participated in the medical marijuana program. The state offered that it had spoken to officials at the Department of Corrections, who opined that they would not allow Nelson to smoke marijuana while under their supervision but would allow him to use the pill form of marijuana, dronabinol, as prescribed by a physician. Nelson's attorney argued that such a restriction on Nelson's use of medical marijuana would be cost-prohibitive for him due to the expense of dronabinol and was thus contrary to the intent behind the passage of the Medical Marijuana Act, which was to allow individuals to obtain medical relief through the use of medical marijuana in a manner that was cost-effective. Nelson was ultimately given a 3-year deferred imposition of sentence subject to 20 conditions. Nelson appealed the conditions requiring him to comply with federal law and restricting his use and possession of marijuana to the pill form. Under the Medical Marijuana Act, "medical use" specifically contemplates "cultivation" and the use of "paraphernalia relating to the consumption of marijuana". The Supreme Court concluded that the District Court exceeded its statutory authority in imposing the condition limiting use to the pill form. The District Court unlawfully denied Nelson the right and privilege to use a lawful medical treatment for relief from a debilitating condition under the Medical Marijuana Act. The District Court also exceeded its authority in imposing the condition requiring compliance with federal law, insofar as it could be invoked to support a revocation of his deferred sentence in the face of contrary state law. It is an axiom of federalism under the U.S. Constitution that Congress does not have the authority to commandeer the processes of states by directly compelling them to enact and enforce a federal regulatory program. St. v. Nelson, 2008 MT 359, 346 M 366, 195 P3d 826 (2008), distinguished in St. v. Fadness, 2012 MT 12, 363 Mont. 322, 268 P.3d 17.

Emergency Rulemaking: Section 33, Ch. 419, L. 2011, provided: "The department of public health and human services shall adopt emergency rules as provided in 2-4-303 to allow for issuance of registry identification cards in accordance with the provisions of [sections 1 through 23] [Title 50, ch. 46, part 3] beginning June 1, 2011."

Transition: Section 35, Ch. 419, L. 2011, provided: "(1) Registry identification cards issued to persons with debilitating medical conditions prior to [the effective date of this section] [May 13, 2011] are valid until the expiration date listed on the card.

(2) (a) The department of public health and human services may issue registry identification cards to persons with debilitating medical conditions and to the persons named as providers or marijuana-infused products providers beginning June 1, 2011, under emergency rules adopted pursuant to [section 33].

(b) Until October 1, 2011, the department may issue cards to persons applying as providers or marijuana-infused products providers before the department has obtained the results of the fingerprint and background check required under [sections 4 and 5] [50-46-307 and 50-46-308].

(c) A person who obtains a registry identification card as a provider or marijuana-infused products provider before October 1, 2011, shall submit fingerprints as required by [sections 4 and 5] [50-46-307 and 50-46-308] no later than October 1, 2011.

(3) (a) The department shall revoke the registry identification card issued to a provider or marijuana-infused products provider under subsection (2) if:

(i) the person fails to submit fingerprints by October 1, 2011; or

(ii) the results of a fingerprint and background check conducted after issuance of the card shows that the person is ineligible for the card.

(b) The department shall notify the provider or marijuana-infused products provider and the registered cardholder who named the provider or marijuana-infused products provider that the person may no longer assist the registered cardholder with the use of marijuana to alleviate the symptoms of the cardholder's debilitating medical condition.

(4) A person who obtained a registry identification card as a caregiver pursuant to 50-46-103 before [the effective date of this section] [May 13, 2011] may not be in possession of mature marijuana plants, seedlings, cuttings, clones, usable marijuana, or marijuana-related products on July 1, 2011, if the person has not obtained a registry identification card pursuant to the provisions of [sections 1 through 23] [Title 50, ch. 46, part 3] as provided for in subsection (2). Before July 1, 2011, a caregiver who has not obtained a registry identification card pursuant to [sections 1 through 23] [Title 50, ch. 46, part 3] shall take any mature marijuana plants, seedlings, cuttings, clones, usable marijuana, or marijuana-related products still in the caregiver's possession to the law enforcement agency having jurisdiction in the caregiver's area. The law enforcement agency shall destroy the items."

Effective Date: Section 40(1), Ch. 419, L. 2011, provided that this part, except 50-46-341, is effective July 1, 2011.

Case Notes

Hashish Not Marijuana — Definitions Harmonized: A medical marijuana card that was issued pursuant to the former Medical Marijuana Act as set forth in 50-46-101 through 50-46-210 (now repealed) did not entitle the defendant to possess hashish, which is specifically differentiated in 50-32-101. The Act was clear and unambiguous on its face, and the District Court's interpretation appropriately harmonized the statutes. St. v. Pirello, 2012 MT 155, 365 Mont. 399, 282 P.3d 662.

50-46-308. Provider types — requirements — limitations — activities.

Case Notes

Right to Employment — Selling Medical Marijuana for Profit Not Fundamental Right: The District Court determined that medical marijuana is a legal product in Montana with an established licensing and distribution system and that consequently a statutory prohibition on accepting money for it implicates the fundamental right to pursue employment. On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed the District Court and determined the right to employment does not grant a right to or property interest in any particular job or employment. Moreover, the Legislature, in its exercise of the state's police powers, was permitted to circumscribe a right to protect the public health and welfare. Mont. Cannabis Indus. Ass'n v. St., 2012 MT 201, 366 Mont. 224, 286 P.3d 1161, following Wadsworth v. St., 275 Mont. 287, 911 P.2d 1165 (1996), and Wiser v. St., 2006 MT 20, 331 Mont. 28, 129 P.3d 133.

Right to Privacy — Access to Medical Marijuana Not Fundamental Right: The District Court determined that statutory restrictions on medical marijuana substantially implicated the fundamental right to privacy. On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed the District Court and determined that the right to privacy does not encompass the affirmative right of access to medical marijuana. The Supreme Court reasoned that while the right to privacy is certainly implicated when a statute infringes on a person's ability to obtain or reject a "lawful" medical treatment, it does not follow that the right to privacy is necessarily implicated when a statute regulates a particular medication. Mont. Cannabis Indus. Ass'n v. St., 2012 MT 201, 366 Mont. 224, 286 P.3d 1161, following Wiser v. St., 2006 MT 20, 331 Mont. 28, 129 P.3d 133, and distinguishing Armstrong v. St., 1999 MT 261, 296 Mont. 361, 989 P.2d 364.

Right to Seek Health — Access to Medical Marijuana Not Fundamental Right: The District Court determined that denying medical marijuana providers compensation and limiting the number of cardholders that each provider can serve substantially implicated the fundamental right to seek health in a lawful manner because such restrictions deny access to medical marijuana. On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed the District Court and determined that the right to obtain and reject medical treatment does not give an individual a fundamental affirmative right to access any drug, regardless of its legality. Moreover, the right to seek health is circumscribed by the state's police powers to protect the public's health and welfare. Mont. Cannabis Indus. Ass'n v. St., 2012 MT 201, 366 Mont. 224, 286 P.3d 1161, citing Wiser v. St., 2006 MT 20, 331 Mont. 28, 129 P.3d 133.

2009 Medical Marijuana Act — Caregiver-to-Caregiver Exchanges Prohibited: Plaintiffs argued the 2009 Medical Marijuana Act (now repealed) allowed caregivers to either exchange marijuana with other caregivers or provide cultivation services to other caregivers for the purpose of supplying qualified patients with medical marijuana, but the plain language of the 2009 MMA authorized caregivers to provide marijuana only to qualifying patients and not to other caregivers. Medical Marijuana Growers Ass'n, Inc. v. Corrigan, 2012 MT 146, 365 Mont. 346, 281 P.3d 210.

Attorney General's Opinions

Local Health Boards Required to Inspect Food Establishments and Participate in Enforcement: In light of clear statutory provisions that place a mandatory duty upon a local health board and its officer to participate in inspection and enforcement of health laws regarding food establishments, the discretionary language of 50-50-305 simply allows an inspection program to be more accountable by permitting the Department to restrict funds going to the local board if it is not a functioning board or if it is not conducting inspections or enforcing legal provisions in a satisfactory manner. The language does not imply that the inspection and enforcement duties are discretionary. Therefore, local boards of health are required to inspect food establishments and to participate in enforcing state laws that govern those establishments. 46 A.G. Op. 3 (1995).

Part 2
Licensing

Part Administrative Rules

ARM 37.110.238 Food service establishments — licenses.

Part Case Notes

Health Permit Requirements — Relevance of Prior Licensing: In an action to rescind contract for bakery, after Department of Health notified purchasers of deficiencies needing correction, the purchasers closed the bakery and gave the keys to seller, who had stated in the contract that to his knowledge he had complied with government regulations and who fixed the deficiencies, received a health license, and opened the bakery, which he had operated for almost 17 years prior to the sale to purchasers. It was not error for the judge to refuse admission of conditional health licenses granted seller in 1968 and 1969 on the ground that they were so remote in time as to have little if any probative value and were therefore not relevant to issue whether seller knew at time of sale that the bakery would not meet health standards. 1997 Amendment: Chapter 366 substituted (4) regarding validity of a license contingent on being signed in accordance with 50-50-214 for former language that read: "Before a license may be issued by the department it must be validated by the local health officer, or if there is no local health officer the sanitarian, in the county where the establishment is located."

1997 Statement of Intent: The statement of intent attached to Ch. 366, L. 1997, provided: "A statement of intent is required for this bill because [section 1] [30-16-104] grants rulemaking authority to the board of review established in 30-16-302 for the purpose of implementing a one-stop business licensing pilot project required by the 54th Legislature."

1987 Amendment: At beginning of (1) inserted exception clause.

Case Notes

Failure to Produce License as a Defense: Offered evidence to show that plaintiff did not have the license required by section 27-111, R.C.M. 1947 (now repealed), authorizing him to conduct his restaurant business at the time he was evicted by his landlord before expiration of the lease was immaterial, since the fact alone would not tend to prove that he could not have procured one upon placing the premises in a sanitary condition. Attorney General's Opinions

Local Health Boards Required to Inspect Food Establishments and Participate in Enforcement: In light of clear statutory provisions that place a mandatory duty upon a local health board and its officer to participate in inspection and enforcement of health laws regarding food establishments, the discretionary language of 50-50-305 simply allows an inspection program to be more accountable by permitting the Department to restrict funds going to the local board if it is not a functioning board or if it is not conducting inspections or enforcing legal provisions in a satisfactory manner. The language does not imply that the inspection and enforcement duties are discretionary. Therefore, local boards of health are required to inspect food establishments and to participate in enforcing state laws that govern those establishments. 46 A.G. Op. 3 (1995).

1991 Amendment: In (1) deleted subsection reference to 50-2-108 and after "chapter" inserted "and enforcing the provisions of this chapter"; in (1)(b) inserted "sanitarians-in-training" and before "sanitarians" inserted "registered"; in (1)(b)(i), before "enforcement", inserted "inspections and"; inserted (1)(b)(ii) requiring local health board to meet minimum program performance standards established under rules adopted by Department; in (2), after "health", inserted "pursuant to subsection (1)" and after "authority and" substituted "must be used to supplement, but not supplant, other funds received by the local board of health that in the absence of funding received under subsection (1) would be made available for the same purpose" for "shall be in addition to the funds appropriated under 50-2-108 through 50-2-114"; inserted (3) authorizing Department to use funds in account not paid to local health board within any jurisdiction not qualifying to receive payments from account to enforce provisions of chapter and adopted rules; and made minor changes in style.

1991 Statement of Intent: The statement of intent attached to Ch. 732, L. 1991, provided: "A statement of intent is required for this bill because it amends 50-50-305 to grant the department of health and environmental sciences [now department of public health and human services] authority to adopt rules to establish minimum program performance standards that must be met in order for the local board of health to receive payments from the local board inspection fund account.

It is intended that minimum performance standards include but not be limited to measures necessary to ensure the accuracy of inspection reports and to allow statewide standardization of inspections and the documentation of work performed.

Also, it is recognized that the exact nature of performance standards is still in the developmental stage. Therefore, it is intended that these performance standards be adopted only after close coordination with local health departments and boards and extensive solicitation of comments prior to adoption of final standards."

1983 Amendment: In (1), substituted "the local board inspection fund account created by 50-2-108(2)" for "any general fund appropriation to the department".

Compiler's Comments

1991 Amendment: Substituted present text concerning access to establishments for investigations and inspections for former text that read: "All persons authorized by this chapter or by regulations adopted under this chapter shall have free access at all reasonable hours to any of the establishments listed and defined in 50-51-102 for the purpose of making inspections".

50-51-303. Department to pay local board for inspections and enforcement.

Compiler's Comments

1991 Amendment: In (1) deleted subsection reference to 50-2-108 and near end inserted "and enforcing the provisions of this chapter"; in (1)(b) inserted "sanitarians-in-training" and before "sanitarians" inserted "registered"; in (1)(b)(i) inserted "inspections and"; inserted (1)(b)(ii) concerning performance standards; in (2), after "health", inserted "pursuant to subsection (1)" and at end substituted "must be used to supplement, but not supplant, other funds received by the local board of health that in the absence of funding received under subsection (1) would be available for the same purpose" for "shall be in addition to the funds appropriated under 50-2-108 through 50-2-114"; inserted (3) concerning use of funds; and made minor changes in style.

1991 Statement of Intent: The statement of intent attached to Ch. 730, L. 1991, provided: "A statement of intent is required for this bill because it amends 50-51-301 and 50-51-303 to grant the department of health and environmental sciences [now department of public health and human services] authority to adopt rules.

It is intended that the department adopt rules to:

(1) require health officers and sanitarians to make reports to the department concerning investigations and inspections of establishments licensed under Title 50, chapter 51; and

(2) establish minimum program performance standards that must be met in order for the local board of health to receive payments from the local board inspection fund account.

It is intended that minimum performance standards include but not be limited to measures necessary to ensure the accuracy of inspection reports and to allow statewide standardization of inspections and documentation of work performed.

Also, it is recognized that the exact nature of necessary reporting requirements and performance standards is still in the developmental stages. Therefore, it is intended that these requirements be adopted only after close coordination with local health departments and boards and extensive solicitation of comments prior to adoption of final requirements."

1983 Amendment: In (1), substituted "the local board inspection fund created by 50-2-108(2)" for "any general fund appropriation to the department".

Commissioner Correction: The bracketed word "account" in (1) was added by the Code Commissioner to use the correct name of the fund account created by 50-2-108(2).

1995 Amendments: Chapter 418 in definition of Department substituted "department of public health" for "department of health and environmental sciences"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective July 1, 1995.

Chapter 546 in definition of Department substituted "department of public health and human services provided for in 2-15-2201" for "department of health and environmental sciences"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective July 1, 1995.

1983 Amendment: Deleted definition of "board" as board of health and environmental sciences; deleted definition of "tourist campground", which read: "Tourist campground means a place used for public camping primarily by automobile tourists where persons can camp or secure tents or park individual trailers or truck trailers for camping and sleeping purposes"; inserted definitions of "campground", "establishment", "parcel of land", "political subdivision", "work camp", and "youth camp"; in (5) deleted "tourist" before "campground" and inserted at end of (5) "work camp or youth camp"; rewrote (7) (see 1983 Session Law) from "trailer court means a parcel of land offered to the public and usually designated a trailer court, trailer park, or mobile home park upon which two or more spaces are occupied or intended for occupancy by trailers or mobile homes for nonrecreational dwelling purposes".

50-52-102. Department to adopt rules.

1997 Amendment: Chapter 350 near beginning, after "department", substituted "may" for "shall", after "youth camps" substituted "to protect the public health and safety" for "to insure sanitation and protect public health", and after "safety" inserted "The rules may include rules to"; and inserted (1) through (7) providing specific areas of public health and safety that may be included in the Department's rules. Amendment effective April 22, 1997.

1997 Statement of Intent: The statement of intent attached to Ch. 350, L. 1997, provided: "A statement of intent is required for this bill because additional rulemaking authority, beyond that already granted by 50-51-103 and 50-52-102, is being given to the department of public health and human services. The rulemaking authority will allow the department to adopt rules for establishments regulated by Title 50, chapter 51, in the following areas:

(1) requirements for food service;
(2) requirements for bed and breakfast establishments;
(3) requirements to implement staggered license expiration dates; and
(4) requirements addressing reimbursement of local governments for inspections and enforcement.

The amended rulemaking authority in 50-52-102 will clarify the department's authority to adopt rules for establishments regulated by Title 50, chapter 52, in the following areas:

(1) requirements to ensure that establishments have safe and sanitary facilities and systems;
(2) requirements for service buildings or facilities;
(3) requirements for plan review;
(4) requirements addressing nuisances that could cause the spread of disease or illness;
(5) requirements to implement staggered license expiration dates;
(6) requirements addressing licensing of establishments and operator requirements; and
(7) requirements addressing reimbursement of local governments for inspection and enforcement."

1983 Amendment: Deleted "tourist" before "campgrounds"; and inserted "work camps, and youth camps".

Statement of Intent: The statement of intent attached to HB 420 (Ch. 341, L. 1983) read: "A statement of intent is required for House Bill 420 [Ch. 341, L. 1983] because it adds authority for the Department of Health and Environmental Sciences [now Department of Public Health and Human Services] to adopt rules setting sanitation standards for work camps and youth camps. The law presently allows the department to set standards for trailer courts and tourist campgrounds ensuring a level of sanitation adequate to protect public health. The need for similar uniform state standards for work camps and youth camps has become apparent, largely because such facilities are not uniformly regulated across the state and are subject to local standards ranging from stringent to minimal. Therefore, it is the intent of House Bill 420 [Ch. 341, L. 1983] to give the department authority to set sanitation standards for both work camps and youth camps which ensure adequate facilities exist for proper sewage disposal, require storage and disposal of solid waste in a manner adequate to prevent contamination and spread of disease, ensure that food is handled and food service maintained in a manner sufficient to prevent food-related illness, ensure that water supplies are adequate and uncontaminated, and define general housekeeping practices needed to ensure sanitation."

Saving Clause: Section 8, Ch. 341, L. 1983, was a saving clause.

Severability: Section 9, Ch. 341, L. 1983, was a severability section.

Case Notes

Blanket Approval Not Given for Expansion of Trailer Park — Mandamus Properly Denied: Where the appellant brought an action for mandamus to compel the county to issue a permit for construction of an addition to a trailer park, alleging that he had been given "blanket approval" in 1968 for all future additions when he submitted his original application for the initial construction permit, the District Court did not err in holding that the county did not give such blanket approval and in refusing to issue the writ. The record shows that the appellant acknowledged his duty to obtain a permit at each stage of expansion and that he did in fact apply for such a permit at each stage. Had the appellant received "blanket approval", these applications would have been idle gestures. There is therefore substantial evidence to support the District Court's findings and judgment. 2003 Amendment: Chapter 93 in definition of public swimming pool at end of first sentence inserted "and spas"; and inserted definitions of spa and tourist home. Amendment effective October 1, 2003.

1995 Amendments: Chapter 418 in definition of Department substituted "department of public health" for "department of health and environmental sciences"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective July 1, 1995.

Chapter 546 in definition of Department substituted "department of public health and human services provided for in 2-15-2201" for "department of health and environmental sciences, provided for in Title 2, chapter 15, part 21"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective July 1, 1995.

Transition: Section 499, Ch. 418, L. 1995, provided: "The provisions of 2-15-131 through 2-15-137 apply to [this act]."

Saving Clause: Section 503, Ch. 418, L. 1995, was a saving clause.

1991 Amendment: Inserted definitions of local board of health and local health officer. Amendment effective January 1, 1992.

1985 Amendment: Deleted former (1) that read: ""Board" means the board of health and environmental sciences, provided for in 2-15-2104".

Saving Clause: Section 5, Ch. 646, L. 1985, was a saving clause.

50-53-103. Department rules.

2007 Amendment: Chapter 310 inserted (1)(b) concerning fees for plan review; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective October 1, 2007.

2001 Amendment: Chapter 483 in (2) near middle after "department of" substituted "labor and industry" for "commerce". Amendment effective July 1, 2001.

1991 Amendment: In (1), in introductory clause after "rules", inserted "relating to the operation of public swimming pools and public bathing places, including rules"; and inserted (1)(b) through (1)(e) requiring rules regarding licensing of operators, enforcement procedures, cooperative agreements, and performance standards. Amendment effective April 27, 1991.

1991 Statement of Intent: The statement of intent attached to Ch. 708, L. 1991, provided: "A statement of intent is required for this bill because [section 2] [50-53-103] requires the department of health and environmental sciences [now department of public health and human services] to adopt rules relating to licensing of public swimming pools and public bathing places, enforcement procedures, cooperative agreements, procedures for hearings to be held by local boards of health, and performance standards for local boards of health, health officers, and sanitarians. Sanitation and safety standards contained in rules already adopted by the department and currently published in Title 16, chapter 10, subchapters 12, 13, and 15, Administrative Rules of Montana, may be incorporated into new department rules as standards for licensing public swimming pools and public bathing places."

1985 Amendment: In (1) substituted "rules setting standards to ensure sanitation and safety" for "rules for sanitation" and at end of sentence, after "health", inserted "and safety"; and in (2) substituted language regarding when rules are effective for "The department shall supervise the sanitation of public swimming pools and public bathing places".

1985 Statement of Intent: The statement of intent attached to Ch. 646, L. 1985, provided: "A statement of intent is needed for House Bill 114 because it grants the department of health and environmental sciences [now department of public health and human services] express authority to adopt enforceable, binding rules setting safety standards for public swimming pools and bathing places.

The department presently has the authority to ensure that public swimming pools and bathing places are safe. However, the section of the law granting the department authority to make binding rules relating to swimming facilities omits mention of safety standards. Therefore, the rules the department has adopted to indicate the safety measures it considers necessary to protect public health are not legally binding, except in regard to pools in hotels, motels, roominghouses, tourist homes, boardinghouses, or retirement homes, for which the department has separate regulatory authority under other statutes.

Therefore, it is the intent of the legislature that the department of health and environmental sciences [now department of public health and human services] has express rulemaking authority to adopt binding safety standards for swimming pools and bathing places, including construction specifications and operational requirements."

50-53-104. Powers of health officers — enforcement authority.

Compiler's Comments

1991 Amendment: In (1), after "places", inserted "and otherwise conduct investigations", after "department" inserted "have been or", and after "violated" inserted "and make reports to the department concerning the inspections"; and substituted (4) regarding filing of complaints for former (4) that read: "(4) enforce rules adopted by the department". Amendment effective January 1, 1992.

50-53-107. Pool operation to be sanitary, healthful, and safe — when lifeguard not required.

Compiler's Comments

2003 Amendment: Chapter 93 inserted (3) requiring a tourist home to display a sign informing guests that a lifeguard is not on duty and exempting tourist homes from having an individual competent in cardiopulmonary resuscitation on the premises; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective October 1, 2003.

1985 Amendment: In (2)(b) after "competent in" deleted "basic water safety measures by the American red cross; and".

1983 Amendment: Inserted (2) regarding when lifeguard is not required for privately owned public pool.

Case Notes

Failure to Provide Expert Testimony Regarding Adequacy of Swimming Pool Depth for Diving — Summary Judgment Proper: Plaintiff was injured diving into a municipal swimming pool and sued the city for negligence and strict liability. Administrative rules adopted in 1985 set standards articulating board lengths for various pool depths, but the rules apply only to pools constructed or remodeled after June 28, 1985, and the pool in question was constructed in 1972, so the rules did not apply. Further, this section does not define a particular standard of conduct to which public pool operators must conform, but rather imposes a general duty on a city to keep a pool safe. Absent an applicable standard, plaintiff was required to present expert testimony to assist jurors in determining whether the pool depth was unreasonably dangerous for the diving board length. Plaintiff offered no expert testimony on the subject, thus failing to establish a prima facie case of liability, so the District Court properly granted summary judgment to the city. Dayberry v. E. Helena, 2003 MT 321, 318 M 301, 80 P3d 1218 (2003).

No Medical Evidence Establishing Violation of CPR-Trained Personnel Law as Proximate Cause of Drowning: After the drowning death of a 22-year old man in Custer's Inn's swimming pool, a wrongful death action was filed, alleging that the inn's violation of state law requiring the inn to have a CPR-trained personnel on duty proximately caused the drowning death. In affirming the District Court's grant of summary judgment for the inn, the Supreme Court ruled that, despite the violation by the inn of pool safety statutes, the estate failed to produce any medical expert who could testify with any reasonable degree of medical certainty that the victim would have survived if the inn had had CPR-trained staff on duty. As a result, the failure to provide the staff could not be construed as the proximate cause of drowning. Schwabe v. Custer's Inn Associates, 2000 MT 325, 303 M 15, 15 P3d 903, 57 St. Rep. 1370 (2000).

General Provisions

50-60-101. Definitions.

Compiler's Comments

2003 Amendment: Chapter 443 inserted definition of city or town; deleted definition of county jurisdictional area that read: ""County jurisdictional area" means the entire county, or an area or areas within the county, designated by the board of county commissioners as subject to the county building code, excluding any area that is within the limits of an incorporated municipality"; in definitions of local building department and local legislative body at end substituted "county, city, or town" for "municipality"; deleted definition of municipal jurisdictional area that read: ""Municipal jurisdictional area" means the area within the limits of an incorporated municipality"; deleted definition of municipality that read: ""Municipality" means any incorporated city or town"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective October 1, 2003.

Transition: Section 25, Ch. 443, L. 2003, provided: "(1) A municipality is responsible for completing inspections that are required for those building, electrical, plumbing, and mechanical permits issued by the municipality in an extended jurisdictional area prior to October 1, 2003.

(2) A project in an extended jurisdictional area that required a building permit prior to October 1, 2003, is subject to city or town jurisdiction until the project is completed. A municipality may not apply its building code to a new project after October 1, 2003.

(3) A county that has not adopted a building code prior to [the effective date of this section] [effective April 21, 2003] may adopt a building code, but the building code may not be effective before October 1, 2003."

2001 Amendments — Composite Section: Chapter 483 in definition of department substituted reference to department of labor and industry for reference to department of commerce and substituted "part 17" for "part 18"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective July 1, 2001.

Chapter 546 inserted definition of county jurisdictional area; substituted definition of municipal jurisdictional area as within limits of incorporated municipality for "means the area within the limits of an incorporated municipality unless the area is extended at the written request of a municipality.

(b) Upon request of a municipality with the written consent of the county in which the municipality is located, the department may approve extension of the jurisdictional area to include:

(i) all or part of the area within 4 ½ miles of the corporate limits of a municipality;

(ii) all of any platted subdivision that is partially within 4 ½ miles of the corporate limits of a municipality; and

(iii) all of any zoning district adopted pursuant to Title 76, chapter 2, part 1 or 2, that is partially within 4 ½ miles of the corporate limits of a municipality.

(c) Distances must be measured in a straight line on a horizontal plane.

(d) The initial written consent by a county to an extended municipal jurisdiction area must disclose the scope of the building codes to be enforced, the type of structures to be subject to the building codes, and the schedule of fees to be charged for permits. If after the county's initial written consent, the municipality wishes to change either the scope of the building codes enforced or the type of structures covered, the changes must first be approved in writing by the county. Unapproved changes result in the rescission of the county approval of the extended municipal jurisdiction area"; in definition of municipality at end deleted "and its jurisdictional area as defined in this section"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective May 1, 2001.

Retroactive Applicability: Section 12, Ch. 546, L. 2001, provided: "[Sections 2(12) and 8] [50-60-101(12) and 50-60-314 (now repealed)] apply retroactively, within the meaning of 1-2-109, to a municipal jurisdictional area as defined in 50-60-101 created before [the effective date of this act]." Effective May 1, 2001.

1997 Amendments: Chapter 42 in definition of factory-built building, in (b), substituted "National Mobile Home Construction and Safety Standards Act of 1974 (42 U.S.C. 5401, et seq.)" for "HUD, National Mobile Home Construction and Safety Act of 1974"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective March 12, 1997.

Chapter 331 inserted definitions of alteration, primary function area, public building, public sidewalk, and site; adjusted subsection reference; and made minor changes in style.

Chapter 488 inserted definition of code enforcement program; in definition of municipal jurisdictional area, at beginning of (b) after "request", inserted "of a municipality with the written request of the county in which the municipality is located" and inserted (d) relating to the scope of building code enforcement; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective July 1, 1998.

Applicability: Section 9, Ch. 331, L. 1997, provided: "[This act] applies to the construction or alteration of buildings subject to the provisions of [this act] for which applicable building permits are obtained on or after October 1, 1997."

1985 Amendments: Chapter 33 inserted definition of "Factory-built building" and substituted present definition of "Recreational vehicle" for "anything defined as a recreational vehicle in the edition of NPPA No. 501C or ANSI A119.2 most recently adopted by the state in accordance with 50-60-401".

Chapter 140 in (10)(b) substituted "department" for "council".

Chapter 352 in (4) changed "department of administration" to "department of commerce" and "Title 2, chapter 15, part 10" to "Title 2, chapter 15, part 18".

1981 Amendment: Deleted definition of "public place".

Case Notes

Process for Establishing County Building Code Jurisdictional Area Based on Franchise Limitation Unconstitutional: The 2001 Legislature enacted Senate Bill No. 242 (SB 242), which established a process for designating a county building code jurisdictional area and eliminating municipal jurisdictional areas by an election procedure limited to record owners of real property instead of the general constituency. When questioned regarding the constitutionality of the process, the Supreme Court noted that because voting rights cases involve a fundamental political right, strict scrutiny required the state to demonstrate a compelling governmental interest in restricting the voting franchise. The court concluded that: (1) the application and enforcement of building codes is an issue of public safety that affects all persons living in the area, not just record owners of real property; (2) governmental entities that oversee building codes are not special-purpose units whose functions and actions exclusively or disproportionately affect record owners of real property over other constituents in the area that do not own real property; and (3) elections to determine who may impose and enforce building codes in a given area are general interest elections rather than special interest elections. The state failed to show a compelling interest in limiting the voting franchise to only record owners of real property, and because the valid provisions of SB 242 were not severable from the invalid provisions, the court held that SB 242 was invalid in its entirety. (However, see Ch. 443, L. 2003, wherein the Legislature amended the voting procedure to address the franchise limitation.) Finke v. State ex rel. McGrath, 2003 MT 48, 314 M 314, 65 P3d 576 (2003). Restrictive Covenant as to Mobile Home to Include Modular Home: Court erred in not granting plaintiff an injunction to prevent defendant from installing a modular home where grant deed contained a restrictive covenant that provided no trailers or mobile homes could be used as a permanent residence. DeLaurentis v. Vainio, 169 M 520, 549 P2d 461 (1976), followed in Newman v. Wittmer, 277 M 1, 917 P2d 926, 53 St. Rep. 516 (1996).

Attorney General's Opinions

Status of Municipal Jurisdictional Areas Created Prior to 2001 Legislation Eliminating Donut Areas: The legislative history of the amendment that created 50-60-314 (now repealed) indicates an intent that the retroactive provisions of the 2001 legislation override existing municipal jurisdiction pending the outcome of an election regarding continuation of the jurisdictional area beyond the corporate limits of the municipality. Therefore, a municipal jurisdictional area existing under this section prior to May 1, 2001, loses jurisdiction to enforce municipal building code provisions as of May 1, 2001, but that jurisdiction could be revived if approved by voters in the election required under 50-60-314 (now repealed) prior to December 31, 2001. 49 A.G. Op. 11 (2001).

Who May Vote in Elections Concerning Municipal Jurisdictional Areas: Prior to 2001, state law provided authority for municipal governments, with the consent of the counties in which they were located, to exercise building code enforcement jurisdiction in an area within 4.5 miles of the city known as the municipal jurisdictional area or donut area. The 2001 Legislature sought to eliminate that extraterritorial municipal jurisdiction by providing for county elections on various provisions allowing for either county or municipal building code enforcement. The question arose as to who should vote in the elections. The Attorney General held that real property owners, as defined in this section, in the jurisdictional area in question were the proper electorate. Under 13-19-106, a ballot list must be compiled that includes every record owner of real property in the county or municipal jurisdictional area who fits the definition of owner and whose ownership interest appears of record, and county election officials should use the property records in existence on the date 30 days prior to the election day to determine who is eligible to vote. (See 2003 amendment.) 49 A.G. Op. 11 (2001).

Request for Approval of Any Extension of Municipal Area Required: Under this section, approval of finite boundaries of a municipal jurisdictional area is accomplished following a request by the municipality. The statute does not automatically extend the jurisdictional area when corporate limits are extended. Therefore, any extension of a delineated municipal jurisdictional area beyond the corporate limits of a municipality must be accomplished pursuant to the procedure outlined in ARM 8.70.211 (now repealed) and this section, requiring the municipality to submit a new request for approval of the extension and requiring the Department of Commerce (function now in Department of Labor and Industry) to act on the request following the requisite public hearing and related administrative procedures. (See 2001 and 2003 amendments.) 46 A.G. Op. 16 (1996).

Meaning of Public Place: Employees present in a building in the course of their employment were not "the public" for purposes of determining whether a building was a "public place" as defined in this section prior to 1981 amendment. 38 A.G. Op. 3 (1979).

Enforcement of Building Code — Applicability: Prior to 1981 amendment, state building codes could be enforced in public buildings regardless of location and in nonpublic buildings located within municipalities and their jurisdictional area as defined in this section. 38 A.G. Op. 3 (1979).

50-60-102. Applicability — local government energy conservation standards.

Compiler's Comments

2009 Amendment: Chapter 300 in (5)(a) and (5)(b) at beginning inserted "Subject to subsection (6)"; inserted (6) authorizing local governments with building code enforcement programs to adopt voluntary incentive-based energy conservation standards for new construction; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective October 1, 2009.

2003 Amendment: Chapter 443 in (1)(a) near middle after "located within" substituted "a county, city, or town" for "the municipality's or county's jurisdictional area" and near end after "legislative body" deleted "or board of county commissioners"; in (2) at beginning of second sentence substituted "A county, city, or town" for "Local governments", near middle after "enforce within" substituted "the area of its jurisdiction" for "their jurisdictional areas", and at end substituted "county, city, or town" for "respective local government"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective October 1, 2003.

2001 Amendment: Chapter 47 in (1) in introduction substituted "state building code, as defined in 50-60-203(3), does not apply" for "state building codes do not apply"; in (2) in second sentence near middle substituted "state building code" for "state building codes"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective March 16, 2001.

1997 Amendment: Chapter 488 in two places in (1)(a) inserted "of any size"; in (1)(c), after "refineries", inserted "and pulp and paper mills"; inserted (1)(d) providing that state building codes do not apply to certain industrial process piping, vessels, equipment, and process-related structures; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective July 1, 1998.

1993 Amendments: Chapter 383 at beginning of (1) and (2) inserted exception clause; inserted (5) concerning applicability of the State Building Code relating to energy conservation, adopted pursuant to 50-60-203(1), to residential buildings; and made minor changes in style.

Chapter 444 inserted (1)(c) exempting petroleum refineries from State Building Code provisions. Amendment effective April 21, 1993.

1989 Amendment: In (2) substituted "buildings referred to in subsection (1)" for "aforementioned buildings" and deleted last sentence that read: "The state may not enforce the state building code under 50-60-205 for those buildings."

1987 Amendment: Inserted (1)(b) exempting mines and mine buildings from state building code.

1981 Amendment: Substituted entire text of (1) (see 1981 Session Law) for former language, which read: "Outside municipalities and their jurisdictional area, as defined by 50-60-101(9), parts 1 through 4 apply to "public places", as defined in 50-60-101(11)".

Case Notes

State Building Code Not Applicable to Federal Military Installations: The application of the state building code to construction projects undertaken by the federal government on its military installations and the collection of permit fees related to the construction constitute an impermissible regulation and taxation by the state of the federal government in violation of the supremacy clause of the United States Constitution. U.S. v. St., 699 F. Supp. 835, 45 St. Rep. 2411 (D.C. Mont. 1988).

Attorney General's Opinions

Inclusion of Multiunit Condominiums, Rental Cabins and Extended Motel Units, and Lodging Houses in Building Code Compliance: The plain language of this section excludes residential buildings containing less than five dwelling units from the provisions of the state building code. The section does not require the exclusion from state building code compliance of multiunit condominiums that use separation walls, rental cabins and extended motel units that contain cooking units, or lodging houses, including bed and breakfast establishments. 45 A.G. Op. 3 (1993).

Enforcement of Building Code: Prior to 1981 amendment, the state building code could be enforced in public buildings regardless of location and in nonpublic buildings located within municipalities and their jurisdictional area as defined in 50-60-101. 38 A.G. Op. 3 (1979).

2009 Amendment: Chapter 300 in (3)(b) inserted last three sentences authorizing local governments with building code enforcement programs to adopt voluntary incentive-based energy conservation standards for new construction. Amendment effective October 1, 2009.

2007 Amendment: Chapter 98 in (1) at beginning of first sentence inserted "As allowed by Title 50, chapter 60, part 3" and near end of second sentence after "code" inserted "enforcement program"; in (2)(d) at beginning of third sentence after "A" substituted "county, city, or town certified pursuant to 50-60-302" for "local building department" and after "action of" substituted "its building official" for "an authorized officer" and near beginning of fourth sentence after "purposes of" inserted "subsection (2)(a) and" and at end substituted "all work authorized by those permits has been fully approved by the building official having jurisdiction" for "the municipality or county has issued formal written approvals or has issued a certificate of occupancy for the building"; in (2)(g) after "collected by the" deleted "municipality or" and after "county" inserted "city, or town"; in (3)(b) near beginning after "issued by the" substituted "building code enforcement authority having jurisdiction" for "local building department" and at end after "code" inserted "or other county, city, or town ordinance or resolution that pertains to the proposed construction"; deleted former (3)(c) that read: "(c) enter into a private contract with the owner or builder of a building that is not or will not be within the jurisdiction of the county, city, or town under which the county, city, or town will provide reviews, inspections, orders, and certificates of occupancy for a fee and under conditions agreed upon by the parties. County, city, or town powers of enforcement may not be exercised"; inserted (4) allowing building inspections outside jurisdictional limits under certain conditions; inserted (5) disallowing duplicative building inspections when buildings may be annexed into an inspecting city or town's jurisdiction subsequent to a requested inspection; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective March 30, 2007.

2003 Amendment: Chapter 443 in (1) in first sentence near end after "within the" substituted "limits of a city or town" for "municipal jurisdictional area" and before "of the state" substituted "city or town" for "municipalities" and inserted second sentence providing that the approval of plans, issuance of permits and similar documents, and enforcement of building regulations for the portion of a county covered by a county building code are the responsibility of the county; in (2) in introductory clause near beginning after "Each" substituted "county, city, or town" for "municipality or county"; in (2)(a) and (2)(b) near middle after "state" substituted "building code or county, city, or town building code" for "or municipal building code"; in (2)(d) in first sentence after "violation of the" substituted "state building code or county, city, or town building code" for "applicable state or municipal building code"; in (3) in introductory clause near beginning after "Each" substituted "county, city, or town with a building enforcement program that has been certified" for "municipality or county certified" and at end after "within" substituted "the area of its jurisdiction" for "its jurisdictional area"; in (3)(b) near end after "state" substituted "building code or county, city, or town building code" for "or municipal building code"; and in (3)(c) in first sentence near middle in two places substituted "county, city, or town" for "municipality or county" and at beginning of second sentence substituted "County, city, or town" for "Municipal or county". Amendment effective October 1, 2003.

1999 Amendment: Chapter 473 inserted (1)(c) requiring each municipality or county to provide a checklist and the relevant permit or notice of plan disapproval within 10 working days of submission; in (1)(d) in second sentence after "sending by" deleted "registered or"; in (2)(g)(i) at beginning inserted exception clause; inserted (2)(g)(iii) providing that 0.5% of fees and charges be allocated to the building codes education program; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective October 1, 1999.

1997 Amendment: Chapter 488 in (2) substituted "Each municipality or county certified under 50-60-302 shall, within its jurisdictional area" for "Each municipality may"; in (2)(a), before "provisions", inserted "applicable"; at beginning of first sentence in (2)(c) inserted "during and in the course of construction", in middle, after "building", inserted "that is being constructed", and before "state" inserted "applicable" and inserted fourth sentence defining during and in the course of construction; at end of (2)(d) inserted "as provided in 50-60-107"; at beginning of (2)(e) inserted "issue"; inserted language in (2)(f) requiring municipality or county to ensure construction-related fees or charges imposed are reasonable and uniform and outlining use and deposition of fees; inserted introductory clause in (3) providing authority for municipality or county certified under 50-60-302; in (3)(a) substituted "collection of fees and charges related to construction" for "collection of reasonable fees, which shall be comparable to fees imposed or prescribed by existing local building regulations"; inserted (3)(c) authorizing municipality or county to enter into private contract with owner to provide reviews, inspections, orders, and occupancy certificates and prohibiting enforcement by municipality or county; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective July 1, 1998.

Case Notes

Zoning Amendment Considered Illegal Spot Zoning — Little Test: Duck Creek Properties (Duck Creek), a Florida general partnership, owned 323 acres of undeveloped land in the Hebgen Lake Zoning District. In order to increase development options and the value of the property, Duck Creek sought a zoning change from R-10, which allowed one single-family unit for each 10 acres, to planned unit development (PUD), which permitted more diverse uses at much higher density. The resolution approving the zoning amendment was ultimately approved by the Gallatin County Board of County Commissioners, but was then challenged by two nonprofit corporations. The District Court voided the resolution as illegal spot zoning, and the Board and Duck Creek appealed to the Supreme Court. All parties agreed that Little v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 193 M 334, 631 P2d 1282 (1981), correctly stated the applicable law, and the Supreme Court examined all three prongs of the Little test, including whether: (1) the requested use is significantly different from the prevailing use in the area; (2) the area in which the requested use is to apply is small, although not solely in physical size, including how many separate landowners will benefit from the zone classifications; and (3) the requested change is more in the nature of special legislation designed to benefit one or a few landowners at the expense of the surrounding landowners or the general public. Under the first prong, prevailing use need not exclude existing use, and the District Court determined that higher density uses under the proposed PUD would have conflicted with the predominately rural and residential character of the surrounding properties. Under the second prong, the size of the area, it was shown that the Duck Creek parcel was owned by a single entity and that the rezoning would benefit only one landowner. Under the third prong, the District Court found that the Duck Creek parcel was extremely sensitive in its importance to wildlife and wildlife habitat, and the court gave that fact significant weight in evaluating the public welfare, convenience, and necessity. State and national wildlife agencies testified regarding the deleterious effects that a rezone would have on public lands and resources, including the negative impact on habitat for elk, moose, bison, and trout, as well as on grizzly bear habitat and migration. Thus, the District Court properly concluded that the PUD zoning request represented special legislation designed to benefit one landowner at the expense of surrounding landowners and the general public. The court did not err in holding, pursuant to Little, that the proposed Duck Creek parcel was illegal spot zoning. Greater Yellowstone Coalition, Inc. v. Bd. of County Comm'rs of Gallatin County, 2001 MT 99, 305 M 232, 25 P3d 168 (2001). The Little test for spot zoning was applied in N. 93 Neighbors, Inc. v. Flathead County Bd. of County Comm'rs, 2006 MT 132, 332 M 327, 137 P3d 557 (2006), Lake County First v. Polson City Council, 2009 MT 322, 352 M 489, 218 P3d 816 (2009), and Plains Grains L.P. v. Bd. of County Commr's, 2010 MT 155, 357 Mont. 61, 238 P.3d 332.

Issuance of Building Permit — City-County Zoning Plan — Injunction: Developers of a proposed shopping center applied to the city for a building permit and requested the Board of County Commissioners to zone their proposed site for commercial development. Residential landowners adjacent to the proposed shopping center sought to enjoin the issuance of the building permit and the zoning. The injunction as to the building permit was properly granted, it being the only way of preserving the status quo until the legal zoning issues could be resolved. Additionally, the city could properly refuse to issue the building permit where the proposed use was not in compliance with the joint city-county master zoning plan. Little v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 193 M 334, 631 P2d 1282, 38 St. Rep. 1124 (1981).

Standing to Challenge Issuance of Permit: Residential landowners adjacent to a proposed shopping center challenged the issuance of a city building permit. Because of an estimated increase of 10,000 cars a day over neighborhood streets, the landowners had standing to challenge the issuance of the permit because they would be injured in a manner the general public would not. Little v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 193 M 334, 631 P2d 1282, 38 St. Rep. 1124 (1981).

Applicability: Section 9, Ch. 331, L. 1997, provided: "[This act] applies to the construction or alteration of buildings subject to the provisions of [this act] for which applicable building permits are obtained on or after October 1, 1997."

1993 Amendment: Chapter 383 inserted (1)(b) requiring Department to conform rules concerning conservation of energy to policies established under 50-60-801 and Title 90, chapter 4, part 10; and made minor changes in style.

1993 Statement of Intent: The statement of intent attached to Ch. 383, L. 1993, provided: "A statement of intent is necessary for this bill because it directs the department of commerce, in adopting rules pertaining to energy conservation in buildings under the provisions of 50-60-203, to conform those rules to the policy provided in [section 1] [50-60-801] and to the relevant policies that may be developed according to the provisions of Senate Bill No. 225 [Ch. 242, L. 1993].

This bill also requires that the department of commerce design a labeling sticker describing the energy efficiency measures in newly constructed homes. In designing this energy labeling sticker, the department of commerce should consult with the department of natural resources and conservation and with interested building industry and consumer groups.

It is the intent of the legislature that the department of commerce adhere to the recommendations related to energy efficiency in residential buildings developed under the auspices of House Joint Resolution No. 31, adopted by the 1991 legislature.

In accordance with the recommendations resulting from the directive of House Joint Resolution No. 31, the legislature intends that rules pertaining to energy conservation in certain residential buildings may not apply to those buildings containing less than five dwelling units and not otherwise subject to the state building code unless an affordable energy-efficient housing program is established as provided by House Bill No. 10 [Ch. 496, L. 1993]. The coordination instruction in [section 7] reflects this intent.

It is further the intent of the legislature that in applying the energy conservation provisions of the state building code to certain residential buildings as provided in [section 2] [50-60-102], the enforcement of those provisions be accomplished through builder self-certification as provided in [section 4] [50-60-802] and not through enforcement by the department of commerce, except for those residential structures containing five or more dwelling units or for those residential structures otherwise subject to the state building code."

1991 Amendment: Inserted (4) concerning rules permitting installation of below-grade liquefied petroleum gas-burning appliances.

1991 Statement of Intent: The statement of intent attached to Ch. 350, L. 1991, provided: "Because many areas of Montana lack access to natural gas, it is necessary and desirable that energy alternatives be available. The legislature declares that below-grade liquefied petroleum gas appliances are not inherently hazardous if properly installed and further determines that it is appropriate to allow below-grade liquefied petroleum gas appliances to be installed in single-family dwellings notwithstanding the prohibition on the installation of those appliances by the Uniform Mechanical Code and the Uniform Plumbing Code. It is the intent of the legislature that the department of commerce adopt rules governing installation requirements for below-grade liquefied petroleum gas-burning appliances in single-family dwellings."

Case Notes

Violation of Administrative Code — Evidence of Negligence: Plaintiff was injured when she opened an elevator door and fell 15 feet because the elevator car was not at the floor level. The trial court found defendants negligent as a matter of law and submitted causation and contributory negligence to the jury. Defendants appealed. The trial court's negligence ruling was premised on defendant's violation of an administrative safety code. The Supreme Court held that with respect to the operation of an elevator, the premises owner owes the highest degree of care. The court relied on Stepanek v. Kober Constr., 191 M 430, 625 P2d 51, 38 St. Rep. 385 (1981), to hold that violation of an administrative code is evidence of negligence but is not negligence per se. The fact that the Legislature mandated the adoption of the administrative code does not change this holding. The Legislature did not adopt the code by reference. Therefore, violation of the code was evidence of negligence and not negligence per se. Because this evidence was unrefuted as regards the premises owner, who merely defended by showing reliance on the elevator company, the trial court was correct in directing a finding of negligence against the premises owner. The premises owner would be liable under nondelegable duty. The elevator company judgment was vacated to determine if a code violation existed at the time of the last inspection. Cash v. Otis Elevator Co., 210 M 319, 684 P2d 1041, 41 St. Rep. 1077 (1984).

Part Case Notes

Process for Establishing County Building Code Jurisdictional Area Based on Franchise Limitation Unconstitutional: The 2001 Legislature enacted Senate Bill No. 242 (SB 242), which established a process for designating a county building code jurisdictional area and eliminating municipal jurisdictional areas by an election procedure limited to record owners of real property instead of the general constituency. When questioned regarding the constitutionality of the process, the Supreme Court noted that because voting rights cases involve a fundamental political right, strict scrutiny required the state to demonstrate a compelling governmental interest in restricting the voting franchise. The court concluded that: (1) the application and enforcement of building codes is an issue of public safety that affects all persons living in the area, not just record owners of real property; (2) governmental entities that oversee building codes are not special-purpose units whose functions and actions exclusively or disproportionately affect record owners of real property over other constituents in the area that do not own real property; and (3) elections to determine who may impose and enforce building codes in a given area are general interest elections rather than special interest elections. The state failed to show a compelling interest in limiting the voting franchise to only record owners of real property, and because the valid provisions of SB 242 were not severable from the invalid provisions, the court held that SB 242 was invalid in its entirety. (However, see Ch. 443, L. 2003, wherein the Legislature amended the voting procedure to address the franchise limitation.) Finke v. State ex rel. McGrath, 2003 MT 48, 314 M 314, 65 P3d 576 (2003). See also Kramer v. Union School District, 395 US 621 (1969).

Admissibility of Codes: Tenants of a commercial building totally destroyed by fire brought a negligence action against the landlord for failure to comply with city building, fire, and safety codes. An expert witness, extensively experienced with the applicability of the codes, provided uncontradicted testimony to establish their relevancy. Sufficient evidence thereby existed in the record to send the issue of the codes' applicability to the jury. Swenson v. Buffalo Bldg. Co., 194 M 141, 635 P2d 978, 38 St. Rep. 1588 (1981).

Part Attorney General's Opinions

Status of Municipal Jurisdictional Areas Created Prior to 2001 Legislation Eliminating Donut Areas: The legislative history of the amendment that created 50-60-314 (now repealed) indicates an intent that the retroactive provisions of the 2001 legislation override existing municipal jurisdiction pending the outcome of an election regarding continuation of the jurisdictional area beyond the corporate limits of the municipality. Therefore, a municipal jurisdictional area existing under 50-60-101 prior to May 1, 2001, loses jurisdiction to enforce municipal building code provisions as of May 1, 2001, but that jurisdiction could be revived if approved by voters in the election required under 50-60-314 (now repealed) prior to December 31, 2001. 49 A.G. Op. 11 (2001).

Who May Vote in Elections Concerning Municipal Jurisdictional Areas: Prior to 2001, state law provided authority for municipal governments, with the consent of the counties in which they were located, to exercise building code enforcement jurisdiction in an area within 4.5 miles of the city known as the municipal jurisdictional area or donut area. The 2001 Legislature sought to eliminate that extraterritorial municipal jurisdiction by providing for county elections on various provisions allowing for either county or municipal building code enforcement. The question arose as to who should vote in the elections. The Attorney General held that real property owners, as defined in 50-60-101, in the jurisdictional area in question were the proper electorate. Under 13-19-106, a ballot list must be compiled that includes every record owner of real property in the county or municipal jurisdictional area who fits the definition of owner and whose ownership interest appears of record, and county election officials should use the property records in existence on the date 30 days prior to the election day to determine who is eligible to vote. (See amendment made by Ch. 443, L. 2003.) 49 A.G. Op. 11 (2001).

ARM 24.301.202 Adoption of codes by local government.

Interpretation of Uniform Building Code Ordinance Matter of Law — Violation May Constitute Negligence Per Se: Chambers was injured after falling into a pit at the Helena garbage transfer station. A Uniform Building Code (UBC) ordinance required guardrails on most landings and ramps, except on the loading side of loading docks. The District Court held that the pit did not fit the loading dock exception and that the city's failure to install guardrails was negligence per se. The city argued that interpretation of the UBC ordinance was a finding of fact that the trial court improperly removed from the province of the jury because the court made credibility determinations and weighed the evidence. Chambers maintained that, like statutes, interpretation of a UBC ordinance is a question of law. The Supreme Court agreed with Chambers. Violation of a UBC ordinance is a matter of law, violation of which may constitute negligence per se, and in this case, it was undisputed that the city was subject to the ordinance and that there were no guardrails installed along the transfer station pit. Chambers was a member of the class of persons that the ordinance was designed to protect and met the elements of negligence per se. Further, pursuant to Montana pattern jury instructions, it is up to the jury to decide whether a statute has been violated. Once the trial court determined that the city was negligent per se, the jury instruction should not have been given because there were no more undisputed issues regarding violation of the statute. The only remaining determination was whether the loading dock exception applied to the pit, and that was a statutory interpretation for the court to decide. The plain language of the UBC ordinance and its exception did not include a pit design such as that used at the transfer station, so the trial court correctly interpreted the ordinance and held the city negligent per se. Chambers v. Helena, 2002 MT 142, 310 M 241, 49 P3d 587 (2002).

Failure to Follow Uniform Building Code as Negligence Per Se — Denial of Judgment NOV Reversed: Rosauers Supermarket undertook remodeling for which ALSC was the architect. As a change order to the remodeling, Rosauers asked that a walk-in freezer be removed and that the access door to a walkway over the freezer be closed off. Unknown to Rosauers and its employee, Pierce, the door was never closed off even though the freezer was removed. Pierce was injured when he fell through a false ceiling after stepping off the walkway, assuming that the freezer was still in place and that it would support him. After a jury verdict finding no negligence on the part of ALSC, Pierce moved for judgment NOV, which was denied by virtue of the fact that the District Court failed to grant the motion within 45 days. The Supreme Court found that ALSC had knowledge of the change order and knew that without the access door being blocked, the door and walkway would leave an unsafe condition after the freezer was removed. Citing Herbst v. Miller, 252 M 503, 830 P2d 1268 (1992), the Supreme Court also found that failure to place a guardrail around the walkway in accordance with the Uniform Building Code caused an unsafe condition in violation of the code, which constituted negligence per se on the part of ALSC. For this reason, the Supreme Court held that the District Court erred when it denied Pierce's motion for judgment NOV by failing to grant the motion with 45 days. Pierce v. ALSC Architects, P.S., 270 M 97, 890 P2d 1254, 52 St. Rep. 93 (1995).

Area Not Ramp Under Uniform Building Code: In a slip and fall case, the lower court applied the Uniform Building Code to the case on the basis that, as a matter of law, the area where the plaintiff fell was a ramp subject to the provisions of the Code. The Supreme Court reversed and remanded the case for a new trial, stating that all the evidence was to the effect that the area in question was not a ramp and that it was error to apply the Code in this case. Knutson v. Barbour, 266 M 170, 879 P2d 696, 51 St. Rep. 749 (1994).

Failure to Maintain Handrail in Violation of City Building Code as Negligence Per Se: At the time plaintiff was injured, the city of Belgrade had by ordinance adopted the Uniform Building Code, clearly requiring handrails on stairwells in all buildings in town. The failure to maintain the building in conformance with the city ordinance constituted negligence per se, notwithstanding that the state building code did not require handrails. Plaintiff was entitled to an instruction on negligence per se. Herbst v. Miller, 252 M 503, 830 P2d 1268, 49 St. Rep. 40 (1992), clarified, as to application of the Uniform Building Code, in Knutson v. Barbour, 266 M 170, 879 P2d 696, 51 St. Rep. 749 (1994), and followed in Pierce v. ALSC Architects, P.S., 270 M 97, 890 P2d 1254, 52 St. Rep. 93 (1995).

Duty to Enforce Code Arises Upon Issuance of Final Certificate of Occupancy: Prior to final inspection by the city building inspector and issuance of a final certificate of occupancy, a building that was being remodeled was destroyed by fire. Although the building inspector had the duty of enforcing the building code requirement that the building be equipped with an operational fire-extinguishing system, the duty did not arise until the city issued the final certificate of occupancy. Massman v. Helena, 237 M 234, 773 P2d 1206, 46 St. Rep. 764 (1989).

Dual Regulation Constitutional: Under former law, concurrent regulation of plumbers by the state under 50-60-505 and by certain municipalities under this section did not deny the plumbers due process or the equal protection of the law. The state regulatory system was a valid exercise of police power over a lawful business. Billings Assoc. Plumbing, Heating & Cooling Contractors v. Bd. of Plumbers, 184 M 249, 602 P2d 597 (1979).

Inspection Not Mandatory: Inspection was not intended to be mandatory as evidenced by the use of the word "may" rather than "shall" or "must". Enforcement was intended to be selective. Billings Assoc. Plumbing, Heating & Cooling Contractors v. Bd. of Plumbers, 184 M 249, 602 P2d 597 (1979).

Attorney General's Opinions

Interpretation of Plumber Licensing Statutes by Board of Plumbers — Licensing Authority Restricted by Statute — Intention of Legislature — Penalty Statute Inapplicable: The Board of Plumbers has the legal authority to interpret Title 37, ch. 69, and the interpretation by the Board must be given deference unless it is incorrect. In interpreting the plumbing licensing statutes, the intent of the Legislature must be determined, and if that intent can be understood from a plain reading of the statutes, there is no need to look further. The statutes as well as the statutory history clearly indicated that a plumber's license is required only for a person who is: (1) working in the field of plumbing in an incorporated city or town; (2) working in the field of plumbing in an area served by a public water supply or sewer system; or (3) working in the field of plumbing and connects or disconnects plumbing to or from a public water supply or sewer system, unless an exemption is granted. There is no penalty applicable to an unlicensed person for whom a license is not required by statute. 47 A.G. Op. 21 (1998).

Part Case Notes

Violation of Administrative Code — Evidence of Negligence: Plaintiff was injured when she opened an elevator door and fell 15 feet because the elevator car was not at the floor level. The trial court found defendants negligent as a matter of law and submitted causation and contributory negligence to the jury. Defendants appealed. The trial court's negligence ruling was premised on defendant's violation of an administrative safety code. The Supreme Court held that with respect to the operation of an elevator, the premises owner owes the highest degree of care. The court relied on Stepanek v. Kober Constr., 191 M 430, 625 P2d 51, 38 St. Rep. 385 (1981), to hold that violation of an administrative code is evidence of negligence but is not negligence per se. The fact that the Legislature mandated the adoption of the administrative code does not change this holding. The Legislature did not adopt the code by reference. Therefore, violation of the code was evidence of negligence and not negligence per se. Because this evidence was unrefuted as regards the premises owner, who merely defended by showing reliance on the elevator company, the trial court was correct in directing a finding of negligence against the premises owner. The premises owner would be liable under nondelegable duty. The elevator company judgment was vacated to determine if a code violation existed at the time of the last inspection. Cash v. Otis Elevator Co., 210 M 319, 684 P2d 1041, 41 St. Rep. 1077 (1984).

Residential Energy Efficiency

50-60-801. Statement of policy on residential energy efficiency.

Compiler's Comments

Preamble: The preamble attached to Ch. 383, L. 1993, provided: "WHEREAS, the Environmental Quality Council, as part of its study of energy policy under the requirements of House Joint Resolution No. 31, adopted in the 1991 Legislative Session, created a Residential Energy Efficiency Working Group (Working Group) to address a long-standing controversy surrounding residential energy efficiency and specifically the energy provisions of the state building code; and

WHEREAS, the Working Group included broad representation from energy utilities, the home building industry, energy consumers, state and local governments, the lending and real estate industries, low-income and conservation groups, and the building supply industry; and

WHEREAS, the Working Group met nine times during the 1992 interim and agreed that any final recommendations must be adopted by consensus and supported by all participants as a package, with all elements to be adopted or none at all; and

WHEREAS, the Working Group adopted by consensus the policy statement embodied in [section 1] [50-60-801] and then adopted by consensus a package of implementation strategies; and

WHEREAS, the implementation strategies include:

(1) information strategies for consumers, builders, building code officials, home inspectors, bankers, realtors, and appraisers, specifically encompassing education, training, and technical assessment and demonstration of conservation measures, as well as an energy labeling sticker and initiation of first steps toward a home energy rating system;

(2) financial strategies geared toward making energy-efficient new homes more affordable, including:

(a) petitioning the Federal Home Administration (FHA) to increase the upper limits of FHA home mortgages;

(b) initiating a residential mortgage program for energy-efficient homes under the Montana Board of Housing that would maintain a low down payment requirement and raise mortgage ceiling levels above FHA limits; and

(c) establishing a loan reserve account in the Department of Natural Resources and Conservation that allows the Board of Housing to sell bonds to enable it to offer loans above the FHA limit that would be funded by home buyers, utilities, and the State of Montana as provided in House Bill No. 10 [Ch. 496, L. 1993];

(3) energy provider strategies in which utilities would continue to offer on a voluntary basis incentive programs to their customers to purchase energy-efficient products or services; and

(4) building code strategies, including enforcement of the energy conservation provisions of the state building code in certain residential buildings through a combination of builder self-certification and state and local government enforcement for those residences currently subject to the state building code, as well as increasing the efficiency standards in the energy code according to the consensus levels adopted by the Working Group; and

WHEREAS, it is the consensus of the Working Group that implementation of the building code strategies relating to the applicability of the energy code to certain residences is contingent on the establishment, funding, and operation of the financial strategy concerning the Board of Housing program promoting the affordability of energy-efficient new homes; and

WHEREAS, this bill embodies those consensus recommendations of the Working Group requiring statutory authorization."

1993 Statement of Intent: The statement of intent attached to Ch. 383, L. 1993, provided: "A statement of intent is necessary for this bill because it directs the department of commerce, in adopting rules pertaining to energy conservation in buildings under the provisions of 50-60-203, to conform those rules to the policy provided in [section 1] [50-60-801] and to the relevant policies that may be developed according to the provisions of Senate Bill No. 225 [Ch. 242, L. 1993].

This bill also requires that the department of commerce design a labeling sticker describing the energy efficiency measures in newly constructed homes. In designing this energy labeling sticker, the department of commerce should consult with the department of natural resources and conservation and with interested building industry and consumer groups.

It is the intent of the legislature that the department of commerce adhere to the recommendations related to energy efficiency in residential buildings developed under the auspices of House Joint Resolution No. 31, adopted by the 1991 legislature.

In accordance with the recommendations resulting from the directive of House Joint Resolution No. 31, the legislature intends that rules pertaining to energy conservation in certain residential buildings may not apply to those buildings containing less than five dwelling units and not otherwise subject to the state building code unless an affordable energy-efficient housing program is established as provided by House Bill No. 10 [Ch. 496, L. 1993]. The coordination instruction in [section 7] reflects this intent.

It is further the intent of the legislature that in applying the energy conservation provisions of the state building code to certain residential buildings as provided in [section 2] [50-60-102], the enforcement of those provisions be accomplished through builder self-certification as provided in [section 4] [50-60-802] and not through enforcement by the department of commerce, except for those residential structures containing five or more dwelling units or for those residential structures otherwise subject to the state building code."

Contingent Effective Date: Section 9, Ch. 506, L. 1989, was a contingency section that provided: "(1) [This act] is void if:

(a) the western fire chiefs association adopts at its annual meeting in August 1989 the proposed changes to article 77 of the uniform fire code that are specifically referred to as amendments to division II "storage", regarding smokeless powder and small arms primers for retail sales;

(b) the proposed changes are no more restrictive than the terms of [this act]; and

(c) the state fire marshal [now department of justice] adopts the amended provisions for storage of smokeless powder and small arms primers for retail sales by March 31, 1990.

(2) [This act] is effective April 1, 1990." The contingency did not occur, so the 1989 amendment became effective April 1, 1990.

Municipal Ordinance Delegating Power — Standing to Challenge Order to Demolish Building: Provided that it meets due process requirements with respect to notice and does not conflict with state law, a municipal ordinance may be passed on the subject of fire safety and it may delegate power to the State Fire Marshal (now Department of Justice). An order to demolish a building issued under such an ordinance was upheld. The State Fire Marshal (now Department of Justice) has the power to provide for fire safety, and no one will be heard to question the validity of a statute unless his interests have been or are about to be prejudicially affected by the operation of the statute. State ex rel. Brooks v. Cook, 84 M 478, 276 P 958 (1929).

Notice: The rule that notice to one to appear and answer in a proceeding taken against him must be reasonable as to time to constitute due process of law means notice suitable to the particular case. Under that rule, a notice of not less than 5 or more than 10 days required to be given to defendant in a proceeding for the condemnation of a fire hazard under this chapter where he resides in or near the city in which the objectionable structure is situated is reasonable. It was the legislative intent that in every case of that nature at least reasonable notice shall be given and "the intention of the lawmaker constitutes the law". Case Notes

Applicability to Private Landowners — Not Limited to Burning of Forest Materials: This section is applicable to private landowners and is not limited exclusively to the burning of forest materials. Whitehawk v. Clark, 238 M 14, 776 P2d 484, 46 St. Rep. 1053 (1989).

Elements of Arson — Presence — Identity of Arsonist: Presence at a fire at the time it was set is not a requisite to finding someone responsible for the fire, nor is the identity of the person who set the fire. Each is a factor to be weighed by the jury. The identity of the person who set the fire is also not a requisite to proving an agreement or conspiracy to set the fire. The jury need only find that a person agreed with another that the fire be set. Mtn. W. Farm Bureau Mut. Ins. Co. v. Girton, 215 M 408, 697 P2d 1362, 42 St. Rep. 500 (1985).

Evidence of Absent Home Owners' Responsibility Sufficient: In insurer's action for declaratory judgment that owners of house were responsible for setting it afire, jury verdict for insurer was supported by substantial evidence and was affirmed. The record on appeal showed that several months before the fire the owners moved valuable uninsured coin and stamp collections from the house; that they stored in the house valuable insured business inventory and equipment; that the house payments were a significant expense; that the house was at one time up for sale and did not sell; that the house was heavily insured; that an unusually large amount of gasoline, some in containers compatible with the arson scheme, was stored on the premises; that some of the arson paraphernalia belonged to the insureds; and that the scheme fit the insurance arsonist profile and was incompatible with other arson profiles. Mtn. W. Farm Bureau Mut. Ins. Co. v. Girton, 215 M 408, 697 P2d 1362, 42 St. Rep. 500 (1985).

Prior Statement of Defendant — Arson Suggestion: Insurer of house sought declaratory judgment that owners of house were responsible for fire that damaged it. The District Court allowed a witness to testify that several years before the fire one of the owners was interested in purchasing a building but the building's owner wanted a high price. The house owner stated in a laughing manner, "Why not torch it, maybe we could get a better price". The witness testified that he took the statement in jest. The testimony had little bearing on the past or present motive of the house owner, but admitting the testimony was within the court's discretion. Mtn. W. Farm Bureau Mut. Ins. Co. v. Girton, 215 M 408, 697 P2d 1362, 42 St. Rep. 500 (1985).

Applicability: This section applies only to the intentional setting or leaving of a fire. It does not apply to a fire in a slag pile that was thought to be dead for 20 years. Belue v. St., 199 M 451, 649 P2d 752, 39 St. Rep. 1516 (1982).

"Set Fire" Construed — Mental State: Analysis of both the purpose of Act, as shown by its title, and the language of the statute indicate that this section applies only to intentional setting of fires. Mont. Dept. of Natural Resources and Conservation v. Clark Fork Logging Co., Inc., 198 M 494, 646 P2d 1207, 39 St. Rep. 1146 (1982).

Limitation of Actions: Two-year Statute of Limitations, 27-2-207 or 27-2-211 (formerly 93-2607(part), R.C.M. 1947), was applicable to action under this section by the United States for damages to property caused by alleged negligence of defendants in setting forest fire. U.S. v. Eytcheson, 237 F. Supp. 371 (D.C. Mont. 1965).

Liability of State to Suit — Active Duty U.S. Army Worker Injured While Assigned to National Guard — Tort Claim Not Barred: While in full-time service to the U.S. Army, Trankel was assigned to a Montana Army National Guard unit rebuilding armored vehicles and was injured by toxic chemicals during the rebuilding project. Trankel sued the state, asserting violations of the Occupational Health Act of Montana, the Montana Safety Act, and the Employee and Community Hazardous Chemical Information Act. The state contended that Feres v. U.S., 340 US 135, 95 L Ed 152, 71 S Ct 153 (1950), and Evans v. Mont. Nat'l Guard, 223 M 482, 726 P2d 1160 (1986), barred a claim that was incident to military service regardless of the substantive law upon which the claim was based, the status of the plaintiff at the time of injury, or the status of the party against whom the claim was made and that the alleged violations of the state Acts did not provide a private cause of action and could be enforced only through the administrative remedies provided for in the Acts. The District Court agreed with the state and dismissed Trankel's complaint with prejudice. On appeal, the Supreme Court distinguished Feres and related federal cases because they were based on federal rather than state tort claims, with little bearing on rights under state law and the Montana Constitution. The Supreme Court overruled the holding in Evans that the National Guard was not a political subdivision subject to suit, finding instead that the National Guard and the Department of Military Affairs were clearly governmental entities within the meaning of 2-9-101 and that the constitutional premise on which Evans was based did not apply. Consistent with other applications of Art. II, sec. 16, Mont. Const., any statute or court decision that deprives an employee of the right to full legal redress, as defined by general Montana tort law against third parties, is absolutely prohibited. Because Trankel was not employed by the Montana Army National Guard or the Department of Military Affairs at the time of injury, Trankel's claim against the state pursuant to the tort claims statutes was not barred. Further, applying the rationale in Pollard v. Todd, 148 M 171, 418 P2d 869 (1966), the Supreme Court held that the statutory state Acts did not give rise to causes of action independent from a claim of negligence subject only to the administrative remedies contained in the Acts, but rather established duties, the violation of which is negligence per se. Trankel v. St., 282 M 348, 938 P2d 614, 54 St. Rep. 380 (1997), distinguishing Feres v. U.S., 340 US 135, 95 L Ed 152, 71 S Ct 153 (1950), U.S. v. Johnson, 481 US 681, 95 L Ed 2d 648, 107 S Ct 2063 (1987), and Stauber v. Cline, 837 F2d 395 (9th Cir. 1988); following Webb v. Mont. Masonry Constr. Co., 233 M 198, 761 P2d 343 (1988), Meech v. Hillhaven W., Inc., 238 M 21, 776 P2d 488 (1989), and Francetich v. St. Comp. Mut. Ins. Fund, 252 M 215, 827 P2d 1279 (1992); overruling Evans v. Mont. Nat'l Guard, 223 M 482, 726 P2d 1160 (1986); and followed in Lake v. St., 282 M 484, 938 P2d 698, 54 St. Rep. 442 (1997), and Oberson v. Federated Mut. Ins. Co., 2005 MT 329, 330 M 1, 126 P3d 459 (2005).

Part Case Notes

No Error in Jury Instruction That Employer Assumed Contractual Duty to Provide Safe Workplace: The District Court did not abuse its discretion by instructing the jury that an employer had assumed the contractual duty to provide a subcontractor's workers with a safe workplace, including transportation from a parking lot to the jobsite. Because the nature of the contractual obligation constituted a material fact as to which no genuine issue existed, partial summary judgment on the issue was proper. Olson v. Shumaker Trucking & Excavating Contractors, Inc., 2008 MT 378, 347 M 1, 196 P3d 1265 (2008).

Duty to Inspect Superseded by Federal Act: The state's duty in this section to inspect hazardous workplaces was superseded by enactment of the federal Occupational Safety and Health Act of 1970, 29 U.S.C. 651, et seq. Thornock v. St., 229 M 67, 745 P2d 324, 44 St. Rep. 1786 (1987).

Employee of Independent Contractor: Under law at the time of the decision, neither city nor its supervising engineer had duty running to employee of independent contractor doing work for city to see that contractor complied with minimum safety standards as it had specifically agreed to do. Wells v. Stanley J. Thill & Associates, Inc., 153 M 28, 452 P2d 1015 (1969).

50-71-201. Employer to provide safe workplace and to purchase, furnish, and require use of health and safety items — safe practices.

Compiler's Comments

2009 Amendment: Chapter 56 made section gender neutral. Amendment effective October 1, 2009.

1991 Amendment: In (2) substituted language requiring employer to purchase and furnish safety clothing and health and safety items other than footwear for "furnish and use and require the use of such safety devices and safeguards"; in (4), after "life", inserted "health"; and made minor changes in style.

Case Notes

Nondelegable Duty to Provide Safe Workplace — Availability of Contributory Negligence Defense: The District Court held that defendant employer owed plaintiff employee a nondelegable duty of care to maintain a safe workplace and that employer's breach of that duty caused plaintiff's injuries as a matter of law. The District Court then allowed defendant to argue contributory negligence, which plaintiff asserted was an improper delegation of defendant's safe workplace duty. While recognizing the nondelegable duty under 50-71-201, the Supreme Court also noted that 27-1-702 imposes on a plaintiff the duty to conform to a standard of conduct for plaintiff's own protection so that plaintiff's conduct does not constitute a legally contributing cause that operates along with defendant's negligence in bringing about plaintiff's harm. Citing Edie v. Gray, 2005 MT 224, 328 M 354, 121 P3d 516 (2005), and Giambra v. Kelsey, 2007 MT 158, 338 M 19, 162 P3d 134 (2007), the court harmonized the two concepts by holding that establishing the existence of negligence per se settles only the questions of duty and breach, but a plaintiff must still prove causation before recovering damages, and a jury may weigh or compare evidence of negligence from a statutory violation that constitutes a proximate cause of the injury along with other evidence of negligence on the part of both parties. As provided in Shannon v. Howard S. Wright Constr. Co., 181 M 269, 593 P2d 438 (1979), and Stepanek v. Kober Constr., 191 M 430, 625 P2d 51, 38 St. Rep. 385 (1981), contributory negligence remains available as a defense to a defendant who has breached its nondelegable duty to provide a safe workplace if evidence demonstrates that: (1) the employee has some reasonable means or opportunity to avoid the hazard without endangering employment; or (2) the harm in question was not a reasonably foreseeable consequence of the employer's breach of the safety duty. In this case, the evidence created a genuine issue of material fact as to whether plaintiff had been contributorily negligent, so it was proper for the trial court to submit the issue to the jury and for the jury to apportion negligence between the parties in reaching a verdict. Olson v. Shumaker Trucking & Excavating Contractors, Inc., 2008 MT 378, 347 M 1, 196 P3d 1265 (2008).

No Exception Shown to Rule on Nonliability of Owner to Employee of Subcontractor — Summary Judgment Proper: Fabich filed for damages from an injury received after a fall from scaffolding while working as an employee of a subcontractor at defendant's power plant. The District Court found that defendant was not liable and granted summary judgment for defendant. Fabich appealed on grounds that the court incorrectly rejected Fabich's theories of liability. Generally, an owner, employer, or general contractor does not have a duty to prevent injuries to an independent contractor's employees, but Fabich asserted that defendant nevertheless had a duty under three recognized exceptions to the general rule, claiming that defendant negligently exercised retained control, that the activity was inherently dangerous, and that defendant had a nondelegable duty (see Umbs v. Sherrodd, Inc., 246 M 373, 805 P2d 519 (1991), and Beckman v. Butte-Silver Bow County, 2000 MT 112, 299 M 389, 1 P3d 348 (2000)). The Supreme Court examined each exception and affirmed summary judgment. First, Fabich's theory of negligence in exercising retained control failed because defendant did not retain control over the working circumstances. Second, the theory of inherently dangerous activity failed because the hazards associated with the job were normally encountered in the workplace and did not call for particular precautions. Third, there was nothing in the contract establishing that defendant assumed responsibility for initiating, maintaining, and supervising safety precautions, so defendant had no nondelegable duty. Absent a genuine issue of material fact regarding defendant's liability, summary judgment was proper. Fabich v. PPL Mont., LLC, 2007 MT 258, 339 M 289, 170 P3d 943 (2007).

Montana Safety Act Not Limited to Workplace — Question of Employer's Duty to Protect Life and Safety Precluding Summary Judgment: Moore employed Peyatt to haul hay from North Dakota to Montana. When the hay was being loaded onto Peyatt's truck, he was seriously injured. Because there was no workers' compensation coverage for the injury, Peyatt brought a claim against Moore under the Montana Safety Act for failure to provide a safe workplace, adopt safe practices, and do anything else necessary to protect Peyatt's life, health, and safety. The District Court concluded that Peyatt's place of employment was the truck, not the loading environment at the farm, and that because Moore did not have the right to exercise control over the loading environment, Moore could not have breached the duty to provide a safe workplace. Summary judgment was granted to Moore, Peyatt appealed, and the Supreme Court reversed. As a matter of law, Moore did not violate the duty to provide Peyatt with a safe workplace absent control over the location. However, the broad language of the Montana Safety Act does not limit the Act only to the workplace. Summary judgment also precluded Peyatt's claim under 50-71-201(4) to present evidence that Moore failed to do anything else necessary to protect Peyatt's life, health, and safety. Because there was a genuine issue of material fact whether Moore breached that duty, the case was remanded for a jury determination of whether Moore was liable for breach of that duty. Peyatt v. Moore, 2004 MT 341, 324 M 249, 102 P3d 535 (2004). See also Stratemeyer v. Lincoln County, 276 M 67, 915 P2d 175 (1996).

Preclusion of Evidence of Federal Safety Standards Not Error Absent Contract Guaranteeing Safety by Contractor on Jobsite: Grover was a carpenter who was injured after falling from the roof of a home that he was working on. Grover sued the general contractor for negligently failing to maintain a safe workplace. The District Court granted the contractor's motion in limine to prohibit the introduction of federal safety standards as evidence of the contractor's negligence. The jury found for the contractor, and on appeal, Grover asserted that the District Court abused its discretion in not allowing the evidence. However, the Supreme Court affirmed. The homeowner, not the general contractor, exercised actual oversight responsibilities on the project, including project design, permitting, provision of tools, hiring and firing of employees, and safety concerns. The contract under which Grover was hired did not address a project safety program, safety devices, safeguards, or protective equipment, and the contractor neither assumed nor exercised the authority to create safe working conditions. Thus, the District Court did not abuse its discretion in refusing to allow admission of job safety standards as evidence of the contractor's negligence. Grover v. Cornerstone Constr. N.W., Inc., 2004 MT 148, 321 M 477, 91 P3d 1278 (2004), following Shannon v. Howard S. Wright Constr. Co., 181 M 269, 593 P2d 438 (1979), and Gibby v. Noranda Minerals Corp., 273 M 420, 905 P2d 126 (1995).

Fraudulently Obtained Independent Contractor Exemption First Raised in Opposition to Affirmative Defense and Motion for Summary Judgment: A worker fell from a carport roof that she was painting and sued the contractor who hired her and the people who hired the contractor to paint the house, claiming failure to provide a safe workplace and workers' compensation insurance. The defendants who hired the contractor pleaded the affirmative defense that the worker was an independent contractor, and the worker responded that the approved application for an independent contractor exemption was fraudulently obtained. Although former Rule 9(b), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), requires a claim of fraud to be pleaded with particularity, in this case, evidence of fraud raised by the worker in her brief in opposition to summary judgment was properly before the court and should have been considered in the summary judgment proceeding. Gonzales v. Walchuk, 2002 MT 262, 312 M 240, 59 P3d 377 (2002).

Inherent Danger of Trenching Activity — Vicarious Liability of Employer for Injuries Caused by Subcontractor's Failure to Reduce Risks: Beckman was working to replace a waterline in a trench in Butte when the trench collapsed. At the time, Beckman was an employee of an independent contractor who had been hired by a developer to replace the city waterline as part of the upgrade to another project that the developer was constructing, as required by Butte-Silver Bow. Beckman filed a complaint against Butte-Silver Bow, seeking damages for personal injuries sustained in the collapse. Under Umbs v. Sherrodd, Inc., 246 M 373, 805 P2d 519 (1991), employers are generally not liable for the torts of their independent contractors, except when: (1) there is a nondelegable duty based on a contract; (2) the activity is inherently or intrinsically dangerous; and (3) the general contractor negligently exercises control reserved over a subcontractor's work. The District Court found that trenching activity was not inherently or intrinsically dangerous and granted Butte-Silver Bow's motion for summary judgment. The court, citing Kemp v. Bechtel Constr. Co., 221 M 519, 720 P2d 270 (1986), ruled as a matter of law that trenching activities did not fall under the inherently dangerous exception because Beckman's injury could have been avoided through standard precautions. On appeal, the Supreme Court decided that the analysis of the inherently dangerous activity exception in Kemp was manifestly wrong, and overruled that case and its progeny. Instead, the court reaffirmed the holding in Ulmen v. Schwieger, 92 M 331, 12 P2d 856 (1932), in which it was determined that the vicarious liability of an employer of a subcontractor was contingent on the nature of the work performed and not on the existence of standard precautions. An employer is therefore vicariously liable for injuries to others caused by a subcontractor's failure to take precautions to reduce unreasonable risks associated with engaging in an inherently dangerous activity. Risks associated with people working in trenches where a cave-in can cause death or serious bodily injury are well recognized in the construction industry as intrinsically or inherently dangerous and are recognized as such as a matter of law. Beckman v. Butte-Silver Bow County, 2000 MT 112, 299 M 389, 1 P3d 348, 57 St. Rep. 466 (2000), overruling Micheletto v. St., 244 M 483, 798 P2d 989 (1990), and Kemp v. Big Horn County Elec. Co-op, Inc., 244 M 437, 798 P2d 999 (1990). Beckman was followed in Cunnington v. Gaub, 2007 MT 12, 335 M 296, 153 P3d 1 (2007).

Material Question Whether County Negligently Exercised Control Over Subcontractor as Precluding Summary Judgment: Beckman was working to replace a waterline in a trench in Butte when the trench collapsed. At the time, Beckman was an employee of an independent contractor who had been hired by a developer to replace the city waterline as part of the upgrade to another project that the developer was constructing, as required by Butte-Silver Bow. Beckman filed a complaint against Butte-Silver Bow, seeking damages for personal injuries sustained in the collapse. Under Umbs v. Sherrodd, Inc., 246 M 373, 805 P2d 519 (1991), employers are generally not liable for the torts of their independent contractors, except when: (1) there is a nondelegable duty based on a contract; (2) the activity is inherently or intrinsically dangerous; and (3) the general contractor negligently exercises control reserved over a subcontractor's work. The District Court cited Micheletto v. St., 244 M 483, 798 P2d 989 (1990), and Kemp v. Big Horn County Elec. Co-op, Inc., 244 M 437, 798 P2d 999 (1990), in holding that the county did not assume a nondelegable duty of safety by contract, finding that Butte-Silver Bow never agreed to supervise the safety of the trenching operations and therefore did not assume a nondelegable duty based on contract that extended to Beckman. Thus, summary judgment was granted to Butte-Silver Bow. On appeal, the Supreme Court noted that the District Court correctly recognized the distinction between a nondelegable contractual duty and a duty based on the negligent exercise of retained control. However, Micheletto and Kemp provide an incorrect statement of the doctrine of retained control. Here, despite the lack of a written contract, the county retained the means with which to both discover and cure any unreasonably dangerous conditions. The terms of the water mains extension document, which provided that the county may supervise the water extension project, required the county to furnish a qualified construction inspector to monitor work performed during the installation of the water supply system and required that the materials and methods of construction conform to county requirements. The terms, combined with the fact that county employees were present during the trenching operation, constituted sufficient facts to preclude summary judgment for the county. The case was reversed and remanded. Beckman v. Butte-Silver Bow County, 2000 MT 112, 299 M 389, 1 P3d 348, 57 St. Rep. 466 (2000). See also Stepanek v. Kober Constr., 191 M 430, 625 P2d 51 (1981).

Admissibility of Codes or Standards — Private, Noncommercial Owner-Homebuilder Excluded From Industry Safety Standards: As set out in Runkle v. Burlington N., Inc., 188 M 286, 613 P2d 982 (1980), the rule for admissibility of industry standards and codes is that unless the codes or standards are adopted by a governmental agency so as to have the force of law, they are not to be admitted as conclusively determining the standard of care imposed upon the defendant nor as substantive evidence of negligence unless coupled with a showing of general acceptance in the industry concerned. The rule provides two separate tests for the admissibility of codes or standards: (1) a code or standard sought to be admitted for the purpose of conclusively determining the standard of care imposed upon the defendant must have been adopted by a governmental agency so as to have the force of law; and (2) when a code or standard does not have the force of law, it may nevertheless be admitted as substantive evidence of negligence if it is coupled with a showing of general acceptance in the industry concerned. In the present case, Lynch was injured while helping construct Reed's cabin home. The District Court ruled that Occupational Safety and Health Administration (OSHA) regulations and American National Standards Institute (ANSI) requirements were inadmissible because the standards did not have the force of law. On appeal, Lynch argued that the standards should apply because they were generally acceptable in the construction industry. The Supreme Court held that construction of an individual's private residence undertaken by a noncommercial owner-builder is not part of the construction industry as a whole, and thus evidence of the OSHA and ANSI standards was not admissible to prove negligence under those circumstances. Lynch v. Reed, 284 M 321, 944 P2d 218, 54 St. Rep. 902 (1997), overruling Hackley v. Waldorf-Hoerner Paper Prod. Co., 149 M 286, 425 P2d 712 (1967).

Safety Act Applicable to Mental Injuries: Lincoln County Deputy Sheriff Stratemeyer filed a tort action against Lincoln County for failing to properly train, debrief, and counsel him to cure his posttraumatic stress disorder incurred from observing a suicide victim. Stratemeyer alleged that Lincoln County violated the Montana Safety Act, but the District Court held that the Act was inapplicable to mental injuries. The Supreme Court held that there was nothing in the text of the Act that precluded its application to mental injuries. Stratemeyer v. Lincoln County, 276 M 67, 915 P2d 175, 53 St. Rep. 245 (1996).

Employer's Duty to Provide Safe Work Place for Employee-Painter Who Fell Off Ladder: Porter and his wife owned a business named Personal Touch Services. Galarneau hired them to do miscellaneous work at his house, including cleaning, grounds maintenance, repairs, and painting. While preparing to paint a 22-foot-high inside wall, Porter fell off a ladder that he had borrowed. He died later in the day. Galarneau was in his business office in Minnesota at the time of the fall. Galarneau had a common-law duty to provide Porter with a safe place to work. Whether Galarneau had a duty under this section is a question of fact for the jury. Porter v. Galarneau, 275 M 174, 911 P2d 1143, 53 St. Rep. 99 (1996).

Landowner's Duty Toward Employee-Painter Who Fell Off Ladder: Porter and his wife owned a business named Personal Touch Services. Galarneau hired them to do miscellaneous work at his house, including cleaning, grounds maintenance, repairs, and painting. While preparing to paint a 22-foot-high inside wall, Porter fell off a ladder that he had borrowed. He died later in the day. Galarneau was in his business office in Minnesota at the time of the fall. Galarneau had no common-law landowner duty toward Porter beyond maintaining his premises in a reasonably safe condition and warning of hidden or lurking dangers, and there was no evidence that he breached that duty. Porter v. Galarneau, 275 M 174, 911 P2d 1143, 53 St. Rep. 99 (1996).

Failure to Install or Maintain Safety Device — No Allegation of Intentional or Malicious Acts — Exclusivity Provision of Workers' Compensation Act Prevails: Plaintiff sued, alleging that her son's death, which was covered by workers' compensation insurance, was caused by the negligence of defendant in not installing or maintaining a safety device. The District Court granted defendant's motion to dismiss on the grounds that the Workers' Compensation Act provided the exclusive remedy. Plaintiff urged the court to carve out judicial exception to the Act to provide tort liability when a worker is killed because of failure to install or maintain a required safety device. The Supreme Court declined to make a judicial exception and relied on the legislative determination that absent intentional and malicious conduct, employees cannot sue their employers for injuries sustained during the course of their employment that are covered by the Workers' Compensation Act. Kortes v. Pool Co., 270 M 474, 893 P2d 322, 52 St. Rep. 291 (1995). See also Maney v. La. Pac. Corp., 2000 MT 366, 303 M 398, 15 P3d 962, 57 St. Rep. 1561 (2000).

Theory of Nondelegable Duty Inapplicable to Provision of Nonemergency Hospital Services: Plaintiffs contended that they were entitled to partial summary judgment on the issue of a hospital's vicarious liability under the theory that the hospital had a nondelegable duty to provide safe radiology services to the public, relying on Jackson v. Power, 743 P2d 1376 (Alaska 1987). The Supreme Court distinguished Jackson as limited to emergency room treatment by a doctor provided by a hospital and not extending to the situation where a patient is treated by his own doctor in an emergency room provided by the hospital as a convenience to doctors. The court affirmed the general rule that a hospital is not liable for the negligence of a physician functioning as an independent contractor and that the doctor rather than the hospital has the primary duty to provide for the treatment of his patients. Estates of Milliron v. Francke, 243 M 200, 793 P2d 824, 47 St. Rep. 1134 (1990).

Duty to Provide Safe Workplace — Liability of Immediate Corporate Employer: The statutory duty to provide a safe workplace is generally owed only by the immediate corporate employer. A complaint against a parent/grandparent corporation was properly dismissed when claimant failed to show: (1) that the subsidiary was a mere agent or alter ego of the parent company; (2) a sharing of day-to-day business activities between the corporations; (3) that the parent corporation had an independent duty to provide a safe workplace through a direct relationship of physical operations; or (4) that the corporate cloak was used to defeat public convenience, justify wrong, perpetrate fraud, or defend crime. Hando v. PPG Indus., Inc., 236 M 493, 771 P2d 956, 46 St. Rep. 532 (1989).

Duty of Care Owed by General Contractor to Subcontractor's Employees: Unless required otherwise by contract or law, a general contractor has a duty under this section to require a subcontractor to use safe procedures and to take reasonable steps to ensure those procedures are followed. Such a duty does not require a general contractor to constantly oversee the subcontractor's operation and was fulfilled when the general contractor by contract required the subcontractor to use safety precautions and comply with regulations, and when it performed daily safety spot-checks and monitored injury reports. Kemp v. Bechtel Constr. Co., 221 M 519, 720 P2d 270, 43 St. Rep. 1022 (1986), followed in Micheletto v. St., 244 M 483, 798 P2d 989, 47 St. Rep. 1740 (1990), and in Kemp v. Big Horn County Elec. Co-op, Inc., 244 M 437, 798 P2d 999, 47 St. Rep. 1768 (1990), which were distinguished in Umbs v. Sherrodd, Inc., 246 M 373, 805 P2d 519, 48 St Rep. 59 (1991), and overruled in Beckman v. Butte-Silver Bow County, 2000 MT 112, 299 M 389, 1 P3d 348, 57 St. Rep. 466 (2000).

Contractor's Duty to Subcontractor: Section 50-71-202 and this section require a contractor to furnish a subcontractor with a safe place to work. A subcontractor is an employee of the contractor for purposes of this section. Cain v. Stevenson, 218 M 101, 706 P2d 128, 42 St. Rep. 1428 (1985).

Sufficient Proof of Existence, Cause, and Permanency of Physical Injury: In a tort suit for damages for a back injury, plaintiff was competent to testify as to his past and present condition and his testimony was sufficient for the jury to determine whether there was an injury. However, the testimony was not sufficient to prove permanency or cause of the injury when his testimony was disputed and permanency and cause were not apparent from the injury itself. Since the trial court gave the issue of permanency to the jury with insufficient proof, error occurred and a new trial on the issue of damages was ordered. Cain v. Stevenson, 218 M 101, 706 P2d 128, 42 St. Rep. 1428 (1985), followed in Moralli v. Lake County, 255 M 23, 839 P2d 1287, 49 St. Rep. 872 (1992).

Nondelegable Duty of General Contractor Imposed by Contract: The duties mandated by this section are owed by a general contractor to employees of a subcontractor if the primary contract creates a nondelegable duty in the general contractor to be responsible for safety. Stepanek v. Kober Constr., 191 M 430, 625 P2d 51, 38 St. Rep. 385 (1981), followed in Nave v. Harlan Jones Drilling, 252 M 199, 827 P2d 1239, 49 St. Rep. 147 (1992), Steiner v. Dept. of Highways, 269 M 270, 887 P2d 1228, 51 St. Rep. 1496 (1994), Gibby v. Noranda Minerals Corp., 273 M 420, 905 P2d 126, 52 St. Rep. 1042 (1995), and United Nat'l Ins. Co. v. St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co., 2009 MT 269, 352 M 105, 214 P3d 1260 (2009), and distinguished in Micheletto v. St., 244 M 483, 798 P2d 989, 47 St. Rep. 1740 (1990), and Kemp v. Big Horn County Elec. Co-op, Inc., 244 M 437, 798 P2d 999, 47 St. Rep. 1768 (1990). See also Beckman v. Butte-Silver Bow County, 2000 MT 112, 299 M 389, 1 P3d 348, 57 St. Rep. 466 (2000).

Duty of Parent Company — Railroads: The plaintiff was injured while employed at a lumber mill's woodchip loading facility. The lumber mill was a wholly owned subsidiary of a larger lumber company, which in turn was a wholly owned subsidiary of a railroad company. The railroad company was named as defendant in a negligence action brought by the plaintiff. Because the plaintiff was performing work more directly connected to the operations of the railroad than the lumber company, the railroad owed the plaintiff a duty to provide a safe place to work. Reynolds v. Burlington N., 190 M 383, 621 P2d 1028, 37 St. Rep. 1883 (1980), distinguished in Thornock v. Pack River Management Co., 227 M 524, 740 P2d 1119, 44 St. Rep. 1284 (1987).

Contributory Negligence of Employee Not a Bar to Recovery: Generally, an employee has a duty to avoid harm from obvious dangers on a construction site. However, if the employee is to continue to work, he may have no alternative but to continue facing a risk. Under those circumstances, an employee is not absolutely barred from recovery because of his contributory negligence. Shannon v. Howard S. Wright Constr. Co., 181 M 269, 593 P2d 438, 36 St. Rep. 632 (1979).

Duty of General Contractor — Actual Control of Subcontractors: The general contractor and owner-contractee have a duty to provide employees of subcontractors with a safe place to work if they retain actual control over the construction property and working conditions. Hackley v. Waldorf-Hoerner Paper Prod. Co., 149 M 286, 425 P2d 712 (1967), is no longer applicable because the Legislature has since repealed and replaced the safety statute and the definition of "employer" under which the case was decided. Shannon v. Howard S. Wright Constr. Co., 181 M 269, 593 P2d 438, 36 St. Rep. 632 (1979), followed in Gibby v. Noranda Minerals Corp., 273 M 420, 905 P2d 126, 52 St. Rep. 1042 (1995), and Cunnington v. Gaub, 2007 MT 12, 335 M 296, 153 P3d 1 (2007).

No Duty in Contracting Company to Ensure Safety in Contractor's Work: An employee of a general contractor expanding a paper company's facilities was properly denied the right to introduce testimony, in a suit against the paper company, respecting minimum safety standards for the construction industry. The paper company's right to oversee and coordinate the work of independent contractors did not impose a duty on the company to ensure that the contractor's work would be done in compliance with various safety codes. Hackley v. Waldorf-Hoerner Paper Prod. Co., 149 M 286, 425 P2d 712 (1967), overruled, insofar as it holds that evidence of codes or standards of safety issued by governmental bodies as advisory material but without the force of law are never admissible on the issue of negligence. When a code or standard does not have the force of law, it may nevertheless be admitted as substantive evidence of negligence if it is coupled with a showing of general acceptance in the industry concerned. Lynch v. Reed, 284 M 321, 944 P2d 218, 54 St. Rep. 902 (1997).

50-71-202. Employer to provide and maintain safe place of employment.

Case Notes

Nondelegable Duty to Provide Safe Workplace — Availability of Contributory Negligence Defense: The District Court held that defendant employer owed plaintiff employee a nondelegable duty of care to maintain a safe workplace and that employer's breach of that duty caused plaintiff's injuries as a matter of law. The District Court then allowed defendant to argue contributory negligence, which plaintiff asserted was an improper delegation of defendant's safe workplace duty. While recognizing the nondelegable duty under 50-71-201, the Supreme Court also noted that 27-1-702 imposes on a plaintiff the duty to conform to a standard of conduct for plaintiff's own protection so that plaintiff's conduct does not constitute a legally contributing cause that operates along with defendant's negligence in bringing about plaintiff's harm. Citing Edie v. Gray, 2005 MT 224, 328 M 354, 121 P3d 516 (2005), and Giambra v. Kelsey, 2007 MT 158, 338 M 19, 162 P3d 134 (2007), the court harmonized the two concepts by holding that establishing the existence of negligence per se settles only the questions of duty and breach, but a plaintiff must still prove causation before recovering damages, and a jury may weigh or compare evidence of negligence from a statutory violation that constitutes a proximate cause of the injury along with other evidence of negligence on the part of both parties. As provided in Shannon v. Howard S. Wright Constr. Co., 181 M 269, 593 P2d 438 (1979), and Stepanek v. Kober Constr., 191 M 430, 625 P2d 51, 38 St. Rep. 385 (1981), contributory negligence remains available as a defense to a defendant who has breached its nondelegable duty to provide a safe workplace if evidence demonstrates that: (1) the employee has some reasonable means or opportunity to avoid the hazard without endangering employment; or (2) the harm in question was not a reasonably foreseeable consequence of the employer's breach of the safety duty. In this case, the evidence created a genuine issue of material fact as to whether plaintiff had been contributorily negligent, so it was proper for the trial court to submit the issue to the jury and for the jury to apportion negligence between the parties in reaching a verdict. Olson v. Shumaker Trucking & Excavating Contractors, Inc., 2008 MT 378, 347 M 1, 196 P3d 1265 (2008).

No Exception Shown to Rule on Nonliability of Owner to Employee of Subcontractor — Summary Judgment Proper: Fabich filed for damages from an injury received after a fall from scaffolding while working as an employee of a subcontractor at defendant's power plant. The District Court found that defendant was not liable and granted summary judgment for defendant. Fabich appealed on grounds that the court incorrectly rejected Fabich's theories of liability. Generally, an owner, employer, or general contractor does not have a duty to prevent injuries to an independent contractor's employees, but Fabich asserted that defendant nevertheless had a duty under three recognized exceptions to the general rule, claiming that defendant negligently exercised retained control, that the activity was inherently dangerous, and that defendant had a nondelegable duty (see Umbs v. Sherrodd, Inc., 246 M 373, 805 P2d 519 (1991), and Beckman v. Butte-Silver Bow County, 2000 MT 112, 299 M 389, 1 P3d 348 (2000)). The Supreme Court examined each exception and affirmed summary judgment. First, Fabich's theory of negligence in exercising retained control failed because defendant did not retain control over the working circumstances. Second, the theory of inherently dangerous activity failed because the hazards associated with the job were normally encountered in the workplace and did not call for particular precautions. Third, there was nothing in the contract establishing that defendant assumed responsibility for initiating, maintaining, and supervising safety precautions, so defendant had no nondelegable duty. Absent a genuine issue of material fact regarding defendant's liability, summary judgment was proper. Fabich v. PPL Mont., LLC, 2007 MT 258, 339 M 289, 170 P3d 943 (2007).

Preclusion of Evidence of Federal Safety Standards Not Error Absent Contract Guaranteeing Safety by Contractor on Jobsite: Grover was a carpenter who was injured after falling from the roof of a home that he was working on. Grover sued the general contractor for negligently failing to maintain a safe workplace. The District Court granted the contractor's motion in limine to prohibit the introduction of federal safety standards as evidence of the contractor's negligence. The jury found for the contractor, and on appeal, Grover asserted that the District Court abused its discretion in not allowing the evidence. However, the Supreme Court affirmed. The homeowner, not the general contractor, exercised actual oversight responsibilities on the project, including project design, permitting, provision of tools, hiring and firing of employees, and safety concerns. The contract under which Grover was hired did not address a project safety program, safety devices, safeguards, or protective equipment, and the contractor neither assumed nor exercised the authority to create safe working conditions. Thus, the District Court did not abuse its discretion in refusing to allow admission of job safety standards as evidence of the contractor's negligence. Grover v. Cornerstone Constr. N.W., Inc., 2004 MT 148, 321 M 477, 91 P3d 1278 (2004), following Shannon v. Howard S. Wright Constr. Co., 181 M 269, 593 P2d 438 (1979), and Gibby v. Noranda Minerals Corp., 273 M 420, 905 P2d 126 (1995).

Inherent Danger of Trenching Activity — Vicarious Liability of Employer for Injuries Caused by Subcontractor's Failure to Reduce Risks: Beckman was working to replace a waterline in a trench in Butte when the trench collapsed. At the time, Beckman was an employee of an independent contractor who had been hired by a developer to replace the city waterline as part of the upgrade to another project that the developer was constructing, as required by Butte-Silver Bow. Beckman filed a complaint against Butte-Silver Bow, seeking damages for personal injuries sustained in the collapse. Under Umbs v. Sherrodd, Inc., 246 M 373, 805 P2d 519 (1991), employers are generally not liable for the torts of their independent contractors, except when: (1) there is a nondelegable duty based on a contract; (2) the activity is inherently or intrinsically dangerous; and (3) the general contractor negligently exercises control reserved over a subcontractor's work. The District Court found that trenching activity was not inherently or intrinsically dangerous and granted Butte-Silver Bow's motion for summary judgment. The court, citing Kemp v. Bechtel Constr. Co., 221 M 519, 720 P2d 270 (1986), ruled as a matter of law that trenching activities did not fall under the inherently dangerous exception because Beckman's injury could have been avoided through standard precautions. On appeal, the Supreme Court decided that the analysis of the inherently dangerous activity exception in Kemp was manifestly wrong, and overruled that case and its progeny. Instead, the court reaffirmed the holding in Ulmen v. Schwieger, 92 M 331, 12 P2d 856 (1932), in which it was determined that the vicarious liability of an employer of a subcontractor was contingent on the nature of the work performed and not on the existence of standard precautions. An employer is therefore vicariously liable for injuries to others caused by a subcontractor's failure to take precautions to reduce unreasonable risks associated with engaging in an inherently dangerous activity. Risks associated with people working in trenches where a cave-in can cause death or serious bodily injury are well recognized in the construction industry as intrinsically or inherently dangerous and are recognized as such as a matter of law. Beckman v. Butte-Silver Bow County, 2000 MT 112, 299 M 389, 1 P3d 348, 57 St. Rep. 466 (2000), overruling Micheletto v. St., 244 M 483, 798 P2d 989 (1990), and Kemp v. Big Horn County Elec. Co-op, Inc., 244 M 437, 798 P2d 999 (1990). Beckman was followed in Cunnington v. Gaub, 2007 MT 12, 335 M 296, 153 P3d 1 (2007).

Material Question Whether County Negligently Exercised Control Over Subcontractor as Precluding Summary Judgment: Beckman was working to replace a waterline in a trench in Butte when the trench collapsed. At the time, Beckman was an employee of an independent contractor who had been hired by a developer to replace the city waterline as part of the upgrade to another project that the developer was constructing, as required by Butte-Silver Bow. Beckman filed a complaint against Butte-Silver Bow, seeking damages for personal injuries sustained in the collapse. Under Umbs v. Sherrodd, Inc., 246 M 373, 805 P2d 519 (1991), employers are generally not liable for the torts of their independent contractors, except when: (1) there is a nondelegable duty based on a contract; (2) the activity is inherently or intrinsically dangerous; and (3) the general contractor negligently exercises control reserved over a subcontractor's work. The District Court cited Micheletto v. St., 244 M 483, 798 P2d 989 (1990), and Kemp v. Big Horn County Elec. Co-op, Inc., 244 M 437, 798 P2d 999 (1990), in holding that the county did not assume a nondelegable duty of safety by contract, finding that Butte-Silver Bow never agreed to supervise the safety of the trenching operations and therefore did not assume a nondelegable duty based on contract that extended to Beckman. Thus, summary judgment was granted to Butte-Silver Bow. On appeal, the Supreme Court noted that the District Court correctly recognized the distinction between a nondelegable contractual duty and a duty based on the negligent exercise of retained control. However, Micheletto and Kemp provide an incorrect statement of the doctrine of retained control. Here, despite the lack of a written contract, the county retained the means with which to both discover and cure any unreasonably dangerous conditions. The terms of the water mains extension document, which provided that the county may supervise the water extension project, required the county to furnish a qualified construction inspector to monitor work performed during the installation of the water supply system and required that the materials and methods of construction conform to county requirements. The terms, combined with the fact that county employees were present during the trenching operation, constituted sufficient facts to preclude summary judgment for the county. The case was reversed and remanded. Beckman v. Butte-Silver Bow County, 2000 MT 112, 299 M 389, 1 P3d 348, 57 St. Rep. 466 (2000). See also Stepanek v. Kober Constr., 191 M 430, 625 P2d 51 (1981).

Admissibility of Codes or Standards — Private, Noncommercial Owner-Homebuilder Excluded From Industry Safety Standards: As set out in Runkle v. Burlington N., Inc., 188 M 286, 613 P2d 982 (1980), the rule for admissibility of industry standards and codes is that unless the codes or standards are adopted by a governmental agency so as to have the force of law, they are not to be admitted as conclusively determining the standard of care imposed upon the defendant nor as substantive evidence of negligence unless coupled with a showing of general acceptance in the industry concerned. The rule provides two separate tests for the admissibility of codes or standards: (1) a code or standard sought to be admitted for the purpose of conclusively determining the standard of care imposed upon the defendant must have been adopted by a governmental agency so as to have the force of law; and (2) when a code or standard does not have the force of law, it may nevertheless be admitted as substantive evidence of negligence if it is coupled with a showing of general acceptance in the industry concerned. In the present case, Lynch was injured while helping construct Reed's cabin home. The District Court ruled that Occupational Safety and Health Administration (OSHA) regulations and American National Standards Institute (ANSI) requirements were inadmissible because the standards did not have the force of law. On appeal, Lynch argued that the standards should apply because they were generally acceptable in the construction industry. The Supreme Court held that construction of an individual's private residence undertaken by a noncommercial owner-builder is not part of the construction industry as a whole, and thus evidence of the OSHA and ANSI standards was not admissible to prove negligence under those circumstances. Lynch v. Reed, 284 M 321, 944 P2d 218, 54 St. Rep. 902 (1997), overruling Hackley v. Waldorf-Hoerner Paper Prod. Co., 149 M 286, 425 P2d 712 (1967).

Duty to Provide Safe Workplace — Liability of Immediate Corporate Employer: The statutory duty to provide a safe workplace is generally owed only by the immediate corporate employer. A complaint against a parent/grandparent corporation was properly dismissed when claimant failed to show: (1) that the subsidiary was a mere agent or alter ego of the parent company; (2) a sharing of day-to-day business activities between the corporations; (3) that the parent corporation had an independent duty to provide a safe workplace through a direct relationship of physical operations; or (4) that the corporate cloak was used to defeat public convenience, justify wrong, perpetrate fraud, or defend crime. Hando v. PPG Indus., Inc., 236 M 493, 771 P2d 956, 46 St. Rep. 532 (1989).

Failure of Alter Ego and Principal/Agency Theories in Proving Duty of Parent Company to Provide Safe Workplace — No Separate Liability for Injury Covered by Subsidiary's Workers' Compensation: Plaintiff was an employee of a subsidiary company and argued that the subsidiary was so controlled by the parent company that the corporate cloak should be cast aside allowing suit against the parent company. The Supreme Court found no suggestion that the parent company was engaged directly in the business of the subsidiary or that the parent company was an operating entity engaged in operating its business at the place of injury. There was no indication that the subsidiary was used as a subterfuge to defeat public convenience, justify wrong, or perpetuate fraud; therefore, summary judgment was not precluded by the alter ego or principal/agency theory. Further, the subsidiary had discharged its responsibility for plaintiff by securing workers' compensation insurance, with the result that neither the parent company nor its subsidiary would be separately subject to liability for the injury which was covered by workers' compensation. Thornock v. Pack River Management Co., 227 M 524, 740 P2d 1119, 44 St. Rep. 1284 (1987).

Contractor's Duty to Subcontractor: Section 50-71-201 and this section require a contractor to furnish a subcontractor with a safe place to work. A subcontractor is an employee of the contractor for purposes of 50-71-201. Cain v. Stevenson, 218 M 101, 706 P2d 128, 42 St. Rep. 1428 (1985).

Sufficient Proof of Existence, Cause, and Permanency of Physical Injury: In a tort suit for damages for a back injury, plaintiff was competent to testify as to his past and present condition and his testimony was sufficient for the jury to determine whether there was an injury. However, the testimony was not sufficient to prove permanency or cause of the injury when his testimony was disputed and permanency and cause were not apparent from the injury itself. Since the trial court gave the issue of permanency to the jury with insufficient proof, error occurred and a new trial on the issue of damages was ordered. Cain v. Stevenson, 218 M 101, 706 P2d 128, 42 St. Rep. 1428 (1985), followed in Moralli v. Lake County, 255 M 23, 839 P2d 1287, 49 St. Rep. 872 (1992).

Nondelegable Duty of General Contractor Imposed by Contract: The duties mandated by this section are owed by a general contractor to employees of a subcontractor if the primary contract creates a nondelegable duty in the general contractor to be responsible for safety. Stepanek v. Kober Constr., 191 M 430, 625 P2d 51, 38 St. Rep. 385 (1981), followed in Nave v. Harlan Jones Drilling, 252 M 199, 827 P2d 1239, 49 St. Rep. 147 (1992), Steiner v. Dept. of Highways, 269 M 270, 887 P2d 1228, 51 St. Rep. 1496 (1994), Gibby v. Noranda Minerals Corp., 273 M 420, 905 P2d 126, 52 St. Rep. 1042 (1995), and United Nat'l Ins. Co. v. St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co., 2009 MT 269, 352 M 105, 214 P3d 1260 (2009), and distinguished in Micheletto v. St., 244 M 483, 798 P2d 989, 47 St. Rep. 1740 (1990), and Kemp v. Big Horn County Elec. Co-op, Inc., 244 M 437, 798 P2d 999, 47 St. Rep. 1768 (1990), which were distinguished in Umbs v. Sherrodd, Inc., 246 M 373, 805 P2d 519, 48 St Rep. 59 (1991). See also Beckman v. Butte-Silver Bow County, 2000 MT 112, 299 M 389, 1 P3d 348, 57 St. Rep. 466 (2000).

Duty of Parent Company — Railroads: The plaintiff was injured while employed at a lumber mill's woodchip loading facility. The lumber mill was a wholly owned subsidiary of a larger lumber company, which in turn was a wholly owned subsidiary of a railroad company. The railroad company was named as defendant in a negligence action brought by the plaintiff. Because the plaintiff was performing work more directly connected to the operations of the railroad than the lumber company, the railroad owed the plaintiff a duty to provide a safe place to work. Reynolds v. Burlington N., 190 M 383, 621 P2d 1028, 37 St. Rep. 1883 (1980), distinguished in Thornock v. Pack River Management Co., 227 M 524, 740 P2d 1119, 44 St. Rep. 1284 (1987).

Contributory Negligence of Employee Not a Bar to Recovery: Generally, an employee has a duty to avoid harm from obvious dangers on a construction site. However, if the employee is to continue to work, he may have no alternative but to continue facing a risk. Under those circumstances, an employee is not absolutely barred from recovery because of his contributory

Duty of General Contractor — Actual Control of Subcontractors: The general contractor and owner-contractee have a duty to provide employees of subcontractors with a safe place to work if they retain actual control over the construction property and working conditions. Hackley v. Waldorf-Hoerner Paper Prod. Co., 149 M 286, 425 P2d 712 (1967), is no longer applicable because the Legislature has since repealed and replaced the safety statute and the definition of "employer" under which the case was decided. Shannon v. Howard S. Wright Constr. Co., 181 M 269, 593 P2d 438, 36 St. Rep. 632 (1979), followed in Gibby v. Noranda Minerals Corp., 273 M 420, 905 P2d 126, 52 St. Rep. 1042 (1995), and Cunnington v. Gaub, 2007 MT 12, 335 M 296, 153 P3d 1 (2007).

No Duty in Contracting Company to Ensure Safety in Contractor's Work: An employee of a general contractor expanding a paper company's facilities was properly denied the right to introduce testimony, in a suit against the paper company, respecting minimum safety standards for the construction industry. The paper company's right to oversee and coordinate the work of independent contractors did not impose a duty on the company to ensure that the contractor's work would be done in compliance with various safety codes. Hackley v. Waldorf-Hoerner Paper Prod. Co., 149 M 286, 425 P2d 712 (1967), overruled, insofar as it holds that evidence of codes or standards of safety issued by governmental bodies as advisory material but without the force of law are never admissible on the issue of negligence. When a code or standard does not have the force of law, it may nevertheless be admitted as substantive evidence of negligence if it is coupled with a showing of general acceptance in the industry concerned. Lynch v. Reed, 284 M 321, 944 P2d 218, 54 St. Rep. 902 (1997).

Case Notes

Safety Act Applicable to Mental Injuries: Lincoln County Deputy Sheriff Stratemeyer filed a tort action against Lincoln County for failing to properly train, debrief, and counsel him to cure his posttraumatic stress disorder incurred from observing a suicide victim. Stratemeyer alleged that Lincoln County violated the Montana Safety Act, but the District Court held that the Act was inapplicable to mental injuries. The Supreme Court held that there was nothing in the text of the Act that precluded its application to mental injuries. Stratemeyer v. Lincoln County, 276 M 67, 915 P2d 175, 53 St. Rep. 245 (1996).

Failure to Install or Maintain Safety Device — No Allegation of Intentional or Malicious Acts — Exclusivity Provision of Workers' Compensation Act Prevails: Plaintiff sued, alleging that her son's death, which was covered by workers' compensation insurance, was caused by the negligence of defendant in not installing or maintaining a safety device. The District Court granted defendant's motion to dismiss on the grounds that the Workers' Compensation Act provided the exclusive remedy. Plaintiff urged the court to carve out judicial exception to the Act to provide tort liability when a worker is killed because of failure to install or maintain a required safety device. The Supreme Court declined to make a judicial exception and relied on the legislative determination that absent intentional and malicious conduct, employees cannot sue their employers for injuries sustained during the course of their employment that are covered by the Workers' Compensation Act. Kortes v. Pool Co., 270 M 474, 893 P2d 322, 52 St. Rep. 291 (1995). See also Maney v. La. Pac. Corp., 2000 MT 366, 303 M 398, 15 P3d 962, 57 St. Rep. 1561 (2000).

Proximate Cause a Required Showing: Mydlarz contended that defendant was guilty as a matter of law for removing scaffolding. The court, however, held that negligence as a matter of law requires a showing that the statutory violation is the proximate cause of the injuries sustained. Mydlarz v. Palmer/Duncan Constr. Co., 209 M 325, 682 P2d 695, 41 St. Rep. 738 (1984).

Preamble: The preamble attached to Ch. 27, L. 2009, provided: "WHEREAS, Montana's general occupational safety act, the Montana Safety Act, was enacted in 1969, prior to the adoption of the federal Occupational Safety and Health Act of 1970; and

WHEREAS, as a result of the enactment of the federal Occupational Safety and Health Act of 1970, federal law has become the basis for occupational safety and health regulation in the private sector; and

WHEREAS, states have responsibility for nonfederal public sector compliance with occupational safety and health regulations; and

WHEREAS, since the creation of the federal Occupational Safety and Health Administration, the Montana Safety Act and the Occupational Health Act of Montana do not reflect the reality of federal occupational safety and health regulation and enforcement in Montana's private sector; and

WHEREAS, the Montana Safety Act contains various archaic rulemaking and hearings provisions because it was enacted prior to the adoption of the Montana Administrative Procedure Act; and

WHEREAS, the Occupational Health Act of Montana, enacted in 1971, suffers from many of the same jurisdictional and procedural flaws as does the Montana Safety Act; and

WHEREAS, it is appropriate to modernize Montana's occupational safety and health laws for occupations other than those in mining and consolidate them into a unified body of law that reflects the scope of state regulation of general occupational safety and health matters as limited to public sector employment."

CHAPTER 73
SAFETY IN COAL MINES

Chapter Administrative Rules

ARM 24.30.1302 Coal Mining Code.

Chapter Case Notes

Changing Place of Work: The common-law rule that the master must exercise ordinary care and diligence to provide his employees with a reasonably safe place in which to work, though not applying when they and their fellow servants are creating the place to work, when it is constantly being changed in character by their work, or when it only becomes dangerous by their carelessness or negligence, does obtain where the place is a completed one, such as that part of a mine tunnel behind the miner driving it, and is applicable to coal mines as well as to any other place of employment. Kallio v. NW. Improvement Co., 47 M 314, 132 P 419 (1913).

Employment Contract Not to Nullify Statute: The provisions of this chapter, the purpose of which is to reduce as far as possible the hazards incident to coal mining, cannot be nullified by any agreement between employer and employee or any rule or custom in derogation of the duties imposed. Kallio v. NW. Improvement Co., 47 M 314, 132 P 419 (1913).

Preamble: The preamble attached to Ch. 27, L. 2009, provided: "WHEREAS, Montana's general occupational safety act, the Montana Safety Act, was enacted in 1969, prior to the adoption of the federal Occupational Safety and Health Act of 1970; and

WHEREAS, as a result of the enactment of the federal Occupational Safety and Health Act of 1970, federal law has become the basis for occupational safety and health regulation in the private sector; and

WHEREAS, states have responsibility for nonfederal public sector compliance with occupational safety and health regulations; and

WHEREAS, since the creation of the federal Occupational Safety and Health Administration, the Montana Safety Act and the Occupational Health Act of Montana do not reflect the reality of federal occupational safety and health regulation and enforcement in Montana's private sector; and

WHEREAS, the Montana Safety Act contains various archaic rulemaking and hearings provisions because it was enacted prior to the adoption of the Montana Administrative Procedure Act; and

WHEREAS, the Occupational Health Act of Montana, enacted in 1971, suffers from many of the same jurisdictional and procedural flaws as does the Montana Safety Act; and

WHEREAS, it is appropriate to modernize Montana's occupational safety and health laws for occupations other than those in mining and consolidate them into a unified body of law that reflects the scope of state regulation of general occupational safety and health matters as limited to public sector employment."

CONSTRUCTION SITE HEALTH AND SAFETY

Part 1

Part Case Notes

Pipe Rack as Scaffold: Because this part requires only that a scaffold be safely supported and properly secured, the question of whether a pipe rack was a scaffold was subject to summary judgment. A lack of safe egress to the pipe rack would not constitute a violation of this part even if the pipe rack were considered a scaffold. Crane v. Conoco, 41 F3d 547 (9th Cir. 1994).

1995 Amendment: Chapter 404 substituted current text defining scaffold or scaffolding, requiring employers and employees to follow safety practices commonly recognized in the construction industry and applicable state and federal occupational safety laws, stating the liability of a contractor, subcontractor, or builder, and passing a decedent's right of action on to the heirs and personal representatives for former text providing that scaffolds be well and safely supported, of sufficient width, and properly secured to ensure safety. Amendment effective April 13, 1995.

Case Notes

Violation of Scaffolding Law Imposing Absolute Liability — Insurance From Liability as Long as Duty Not Delegated to Another: A violation of the duties imposed under Montana scaffolding law imposes absolute liability and creates a nondelegable duty to ensure workplace safety. However, the party with the duty can still insure itself from liability arising out of violations of that duty as long as the duty itself is not delegated to another, and carrying insurance for liability under the scaffolding law is not the same as delegating one's duty to comply with the law. United Nat'l Ins. Co. v. St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co., 2009 MT 269, 352 M 105, 214 P3d 1260 (2009).

Scaffolding Law Inapplicable to Defendant Who Neither Used nor Constructed Scaffolding: Fabich filed for damages from an injury received after a fall from scaffolding while working as an employee of a subcontractor at defendant's power plant. The District Court held that Montana scaffolding law did not apply to defendant and granted summary judgment for defendant. Fabich appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. Defendant neither used nor constructed the scaffolding at issue and was not a contractor, subcontractor, or builder, so the scaffolding law did not apply. Fabich v. PPL Mont., LLC, 2007 MT 258, 339 M 289, 170 P3d 943 (2007).

City Not Liable Under Scaffolding Law: Plaintiff's husband was killed in the collapse of a scaffold, and plaintiff sued the city of Missoula, asserting that the city violated its duty to inspect the scaffold. The District Court found that the city owed no duty and summarily dismissed the claim. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. Under this section, the Legislature imposed liability only on certain entities for violations of scaffolding law, not including cities. Additionally, under State ex rel. Great Falls Nat'l Bank v. District Court, 154 M 336, 463 P2d 326 (1969), only those having direct and immediate control of the work involving the scaffold are required to make an injured worker whole. Because the city was not liable for scaffolding violations, plaintiff failed to raise a justiciable issue for which relief could be granted and the claim was dismissed as moot. Dukes v. Missoula, 2005 MT 196, 328 M 155, 119 P3d 61 (2005), following Dennis v. Brown, 2005 MT 85, 326 M 422, 110 P3d 17 (2005).

Montana Scaffolding Law Not Preempted by Federal Occupational Safety and Health Act: Dukes died after being injured while performing scaffolding work. His estate sued the city of Missoula, claiming that the city failed to enforce state scaffolding laws by performing inspections required under former 50-77-106 (repealed 1999) and that the failure to inspect was a breach of a legal duty and negligence per se under state law. The District Court held that state law was preempted by the federal Occupational Safety and Health Act of 1970 (OSHA), that the state therefore could not impose a legal duty on the city, and that without a legal duty, the city could not be held negligent under state law. The estate appealed. The Supreme Court noted that there are three ways that federal law may preempt state law: (1) by express preemption through a preemption clause in the federal law stating that state law will not apply; (2) through implied field preemption, wherein federal regulation is so pervasive or comprehensive that it is reasonable to infer that Congress intended to occupy the field and leave no room for supplementary state regulation; and (3) through implied conflict preemption, which manifests itself as an inability of state law to comply with federal law or when state law stands as an obstacle to the objectives of Congress. Express preemption must be clearly manifested, and because no provision of OSHA expressly preempts state health and safety standards or statutory duties, express preemption did not apply. Field preemption also was inapplicable. States can promulgate occupational safety and health standards and enforce them in the absence of OSHA standards; OSHA does not affect state workers' compensation laws or enlarge or diminish state common law or tort law available to injured workers; and OSHA does not create a right of action for injured workers, but allows injured workers to pursue rights of action under state law. Finally, the building inspector's duty to inspect and enforce compliance with OSHA scaffolding standards also survived conflict preemption because nothing in OSHA contemplates that inspection and enforcement are the sole responsibility of the federal government and inspection and enforcement by a state official are preempted only if in conflict with OSHA. Thus, the District Court erred in holding that OSHA preempted state law, so the case was reversed and remanded for further proceedings. Dukes v. Sirius Constr., Inc., 2003 MT 152, 316 M 226, 73 P3d 781 (2003). See also Traudt v. Potomac Elec. Power Co., 692 A2d 1326 (D.C. 1997).

Insurance Adjuster's Fall From Ladder While Assessing Damage: Under this section as it read before the 1995 amendment, which was not retroactive, when an insurance adjuster used a ladder to access a damaged garage roof, the ladder constituted a scaffold and the adjuster was using the ladder as a working place to assess the damage and thus facilitate the roof's repair. Failure to comply with this section is negligence per se, and the defense of contributory negligence is not available. The District Court erred in determining that the ladder was not a scaffold and that this section thus did not apply and in applying the contributory negligence law. Wilson v. Vukasin, 277 M 423, 922 P2d 531, 53 St. Rep. 819 (1996).

Fall From Ladder After Scaffolding Law Amended to Delete Ladders From Definition of Scaffold: In 1992, the employee fell off a ladder while preparing to paint a wall. He died later the same day. The 1995 amendment of this section, which excluded ladders from the definition of a scaffold, would, if retroactively applied to this case, result in a different legal effect than the prior law. This is forbidden by 1-2-109, which provides that a statute is not retroactive unless expressly so declared. Porter v. Galarneau, 275 M 174, 911 P2d 1143, 53 St. Rep. 99 (1996).

Absence of Scaffolding Guardrail — Omission as Proximate Cause and Breach of Duty: The absence of a guardrail on the outer edge of a deck overhang constituting scaffolding on a bridge construction project that did not meet the requirements of a Certification Acceptance Agreement, which incorporated by reference the construction manual and state and federal laws, including the Montana scaffolding laws, was considered a breach of a contractual duty to ensure that a subcontractor has provided appropriate scaffolding. The breach of duty was negligence per se and the proximate cause of plaintiff's injuries; thus, remand for a determination of damages was appropriate. Steiner v. Dept. of Highways, 269 M 270, 887 P2d 1228, 51 St. Rep. 1496 (1994).

"Scaffold" Construed: The purpose of the scaffolding law is to supplement the protection of the common law by providing criminal sanctions and imposing an absolute statutory duty upon the owners of real estate to protect workmen and others from the extraordinary hazards associated with scaffolds. When a scaffold was not available, Mydlarz used a ladder to remove the covering from ceiling sprinkler nozzles. He fell from the ladder and was injured. The court found "scaffolding" includes not only a device commonly considered a scaffold but additionally any device utilized by workmen to allow them to work where a fall might result in serious injury. The scaffolding law therefore applies to the ladder being used by Mydlarz at the time of his injury. Mydlarz v. Palmer/Duncan Constr. Co., 209 M 325, 682 P2d 695, 41 St. Rep. 738 (1984).

Nondelegable Duty of General Contractor: An employee of a subcontractor was injured in a fall from the subcontractor's scaffolding. Because a provision in the primary contract created a nondelegable duty in the general contractor to provide for job safety, the provisions of this section apply as between the employee of the subcontractor and the general contractor. Stepanek v. Kober Constr., 191 M 430, 625 P2d 51, 38 St. Rep. 385 (1981), followed in Steiner v. Dept. of Highways, 269 M 270, 887 P2d 1228, 51 St. Rep. 1496 (1994), and United Nat'l Ins. Co. v. St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co., 2009 MT 269, 352 M 105, 214 P3d 1260 (2009).

Against Whom Injured Worker Entitled to Recover: The firm, person, or corporation having direct and immediate control of the work involving the use of scaffolding is the one upon whom the duty is imposed by the scaffold law. Bonawitz v. Bourke, 173 M 179, 567 P2d 32 (1977).

Intended Use of Scaffold: Owner was not liable to worker hired to construct addition to building for injury sustained by worker using structurally sound scaffold as means of access from one scaffold to another. Statute requires that scaffold be structurally sound in relation to purpose for which it is erected and is not violated when worker is injured while using scaffold for purpose for which it was not intended. Joki v. McBride, 150 M 378, 436 P2d 78 (1967).

Common-Law Defenses Foreclosed:

In action against employers for personal injuries alleged to have resulted from a fall from a scaffold, trial court was not in error in refusing defendants' instruction on assumption of the risk where the court gave defendants more than they were entitled to by granting them an instruction on contributory negligence over plaintiff's objection that this section had removed that defense. Pollard v. Todd, 148 M 171, 418 P2d 869 (1966), followed in Steiner v. Dept. of Highways, 269 M 270, 887 P2d 1228, 51 St. Rep. 1496 (1994).

The mandatory nature of the scaffold law (50-77-101 through 50-77-107) forecloses the common-law defenses of assumption of the risk, contributory negligence, and negligence of a fellow servant, but a defendant may escape liability upon proof that there was no violation of the statute or that the violation was not the proximate cause of the injury. Pollard v. Todd, 148 M 171, 418 P2d 869 (1966), followed in Steiner v. Dept. of Highways, 269 M 270, 887 P2d 1228, 51 St. Rep. 1496 (1994).

Negligence: Although this section imposes an absolute duty upon employers of person working on scaffold and breach of that statutory duty is negligence per se, whether negligence was proximate cause of injury sustained in fall from scaffold is question for jury in resultant personal injury action. Pollard v. Todd, 148 M 171, 418 P2d 869 (1966), followed in Steiner v. Dept. of Highways, 269 M 270, 887 P2d 1228, 51 St. Rep. 1496 (1994).

Purpose: The purpose of this section is to supplement the protection of the common law by providing criminal sanctions and imposing an absolute statutory duty upon the owners of real estate to protect workers and others from extraordinary hazards associated with scaffolds. Pollard v. Todd, 148 M 171, 418 P2d 869 (1966), followed in Steiner v. Dept. of Highways, 269 M 270, 887 P2d 1228, 51 St. Rep. 1496 (1994).

Supervision or Control of Person Home Owner Hired to Paint Wall While Home Owner in Another State: Porter and his wife owned a business named Personal Touch Services. Galarneau hired them to do miscellaneous work at his house, including cleaning, grounds maintenance, repairs, and painting. While preparing to paint a 22-foot-high inside wall, Porter fell off a ladder that he had borrowed. He died later in the day. Galarneau was in his business office in Minnesota at the time of the fall. Galarneau was Porter's employer and had direct and immediate supervision or control (the basic element of the employer-employee relationship) of the work for purposes of the scaffolding law. Porter v. Galarneau, 275 M 174, 911 P2d 1143, 53 St. Rep. 99 (1996).

"Direct and Immediate Supervision" — Liability of Foreman: A contractor's foreman having control of the work which involved the use of scaffolding cannot be held liable since he acted simply as an employee and not an owner, person, or corporation having direct and immediate supervision and control of the masonry construction. Boyer v. Kloepfer, 170 M 472, 554 P2d 1116 (1976).

Owner's Direct and Immediate Control of Work: Injured worker who fell from scaffolding was not entitled to summary judgment against owner of building where owner was not in direct and immediate control of work involving use of such scaffolding. State ex rel. Great Falls Nat'l Bank v. District Court, 154 M 336, 463 P2d 326 (1969).

Nondelegable Duty of General Contractor: An employee of a subcontractor was injured in a fall from the subcontractor's scaffolding. Case Notes

Indemnification Provisions — "Clear and Unequivocal" Standard: A contract provision that required the subcontractor to indemnify the general contractor for damages arising out of the subcontractor's negligence did not require the subcontractor to indemnify the general contractor for the general contractor's own negligence. Contractual provisions that indemnify a party for its own negligence must be "clear and unequivocal" to be enforceable. The general contractor was found negligent per se under this part, commonly known as the Montana Scaffolding Act. The general contractor could not use the indemnification clause of the contract in order to recover against the subcontractor. Slater v. Cent. Plumbing & Heating Co., 275 M 266, 912 P2d 780, 53 St. Rep. 132 (1996). Following the 1996 decision (Slater I), the general contractor sought contribution from the subcontractor for that portion of liability attributable to the subcontractor. The District Court held that Slater I closed all the general contractor's doors of recovery from the subcontractor under any theory. However, the motion for partial summary judgment that gave rise to Slater I was based on the first claim of the general contractor's amended cross-claim and only precluded indemnification for the general contractor's own negligence under a breach of contract claim, but the general contractor was not precluded by the prohibition against splitting a cause of action or by the doctrine of res judicata from pursuing a separate claim for contribution under the second claim of its amended cross-claim. The issue of indemnity based on the subcontractor's negligence was not the same as the previously decided issues regarding whether there was an indemnity claim based on the general contractor's negligence or a breach of contract in relation to the safety provisions. Thus, the case was remanded for further proceedings on the remaining claims. Slater v. Cent. Plumbing & Heating Co., 1999 MT 257, 297 M 7, 993 P2d 654, 56 St. Rep. 1023 (1999).

"Direct and Immediate Supervision" — Liability of Foreman: A contractor's foreman having control of the work which involved the use of scaffolding cannot be held liable since he acted simply as an employee and not an owner, person, or corporation having direct and immediate supervision and control of the masonry construction. Boyer v. Kloepfer, 170 M 472, 554 P2d 1116 (1976).

Direct and Immediate Control of Premises: Construction company was not liable to building owner's employee for injuries incurred in fall through hole in floor as result of construction company's removing equipment, where construction company had completed work over 2 months prior to fall and was therefore not in immediate or direct control or supervision of building. Hannifin v. Cahill-Mooney Constr. Co., 159 M 413, 498 P2d 1214 (1972).

Liability of State to Suit — Active Duty U.S. Army Worker Injured While Assigned to National Guard — Tort Claim Not Barred: While in full-time service to the U.S. Army, Trankel was assigned to a Montana Army National Guard unit rebuilding armored vehicles and was injured by toxic chemicals during the rebuilding project. Trankel sued the state, asserting violations of the Occupational Health Act of Montana, the Montana Safety Act, and the Employee and Community Hazardous Chemical Information Act. The state contended that Feres v. U.S., 340 US 135, 95 L Ed 152, 71 S Ct 153 (1950), and Evans v. Mont. Nat'l Guard, 223 M 482, 726 P2d 1160 (1986), barred a claim that was incident to military service regardless of the substantive law upon which the claim was based, the status of the plaintiff at the time of injury, or the status of the party against whom the claim was made and that the alleged violations of the state Acts did not provide a private cause of action and could be enforced only through the administrative remedies provided for in the Acts. The District Court agreed with the state and dismissed Trankel's complaint with prejudice. On appeal, the Supreme Court distinguished Feres and related federal cases because they were based on federal rather than state tort claims, with little bearing on rights under state law and the Montana Constitution. The Supreme Court overruled the holding in Evans that the National Guard was not a political subdivision subject to suit, finding instead that the National Guard and the Department of Military Affairs were clearly governmental entities within the meaning of 2-9-101 and that the constitutional premise on which Evans was based did not apply. Consistent with other applications of Art. II, sec. 16, Mont. Const., any statute or court decision that deprives an employee of the right to full legal redress, as defined by general Montana tort law against third parties, is absolutely prohibited. Because Trankel was not employed by the Montana Army National Guard or the Department of Military Affairs at the time of injury, Trankel's claim against the state pursuant to the tort claims statutes was not barred. Further, applying the rationale in Pollard v. Todd, 148 M 171, 418 P2d 869 (1966), the Supreme Court held that the statutory state Acts did not give rise to causes of action independent from a claim of negligence subject only to the administrative remedies contained in the Acts, but rather established duties, the violation of which is negligence per se.

1995 Amendments — Composite Section: Chapter 418 in definition of Department substituted "department of environmental quality" for "department of health and environmental sciences"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective July 1, 1995.

Chapter 546 in definition of Department substituted "department of public health and human services provided for in 2-15-2201" for "department of health and environmental sciences provided for in Title 2, chapter 15, part 21"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective July 1, 1995.

Because the changes in Ch. 418 reflect the reassignment of duties and because the changes in Ch. 546 are name changes, pursuant to sec. 569, Ch. 546, the Code Commissioner has codified the changes in Ch. 418.

Transition: Section 499, Ch. 418, L. 1995, provided: "The provisions of 2-15-131 through 2-15-137 apply to [this act]."

Saving Clause: Section 503, Ch. 418, L. 1995, was a saving clause.

50-78-103. Applicability — exemptions.

Compiler's Comments

1997 Amendment: Chapter 93 inserted (2)(d) including reference to a public health center defined in 7-34-2102; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective March 19, 1997.

Saving Clause: Section 21, Ch. 93, L. 1997, was a saving clause.

1987 Amendment: Inserted (1)(f)(ii) exempting sealed containers at a distributor's facility under certain conditions; and in (2) substituted "50-78-301(2) through (4)" for "50-78-301(6) through (8)".

Compiler Clarification: A committee of the whole amendment to SB 452 (Ch. 641, L. 1985) inserted subsection (2) of 50-78-301. Because this amendment renumbered subsequent subsections, the compiler has substituted a reference to subsections (6) through (8) of 50-78-301 for a reference to 50-78-301(5) through (7) in subsection (2) of this section to reflect the intent of the bill as introduced.

50-78-104. Relationship to OSHA standard.

Compiler's Comments

1987 Amendment: Substituted present language (see 1987 Session Law for text) for former language that read: "(1) Manufacturing employers and distributors that are regulated by and complying with the provisions of the OSHA standard are exempt from the provisions of this chapter, except for 50-78-202 through 50-78-204 and 50-78-301.

(2) Nonmanufacturing employers that adopt and comply with the provisions of the OSHA standard are exempt from the provisions of this chapter, except for 50-78-202 through 50-78-204 and 50-78-301."

50-78-202. Workplace chemical list.

Compiler's Comments

1986 Amendment: Substituted "Each employer shall compile and maintain a workplace chemical list. Except as provided in 50-78-205, the workplace chemical list must contain the chemical name of each hazardous chemical in the workplace, cross-referenced to any generally used common name. For chemical mixtures, the chemical name of each hazardous constituent indicated on the material safety data sheet must be provided in parentheses along with the chemical name. The chemical abstracts service registry number, if available from the material safety data sheet, must accompany all chemical names on the workplace chemical list" for former (1) that read: "Each employer shall compile and maintain a workplace chemical list that must contain the following information for each hazardous chemical present in the workplace:

(a) except as provided in 50-78-205, all generally used common names of any hazardous chemical present in the workplace, cross-referenced to the chemical name; and

(b) the work area in which the hazardous chemical is normally stored or used"; and inserted (2) requiring the workplace chemical list to indicate the work area in which each hazardous chemical is normally stored or used.

50-78-301. Emergency and community information.

Compiler's Comments

1991 Amendment: In second sentence of (4) substituted "50-62-102" for "50-62-108". Amendment effective April 29, 1991.

1987 Amendment: In contingent version, deleted former (1) through (5) that related to recording workplace hazardous chemicals with the County Clerk and Recorder and allowing inspection of the recorded documents by the public and the local fire chief; and inserted (1) requiring employer compliance with federal Emergency Planning and Community Right-to-Know Act of 1986.

Contingent Effective Date: Section 4, Ch. 536, L. 1987, provided: "Effective date. (1) This act, except for section 3 [amending 50-78-301], is effective on passage and approval.

(2) Section 3 [amending 50-78-301] is effective on completion of the following sequence of events in Montana under the provisions of the federal Emergency Planning and Community Right-to-know Act of 1986:

(a) the appointment of an emergency planning commission by the governor;

(b) the designation by the commission of emergency planning districts that together encompass the entire state; and

(c) the appointment of members to local planning committees in each district." The contingency has occurred.

1986 Amendment: In (1) at beginning deleted "Except as provided in subsection (2)", and in middle of introduction substituted "record" for "submit"; deleted former (1)(a) that read: "(a) a copy of the most current material safety data sheet certified by the employer for each hazardous chemical in the workplace"; and substituted "An employer may record a copy of a material safety data sheet for any hazardous chemical in the workplace" for former (2) that read: "The county clerk and recorder shall record and update as necessary an index listing each hazardous chemical for which a material safety data sheet has been recorded in the county. The index must include the name of the employer who recorded the material safety data sheet. No employer shall be required to record a material safety data sheet for any hazardous chemical for which a material safety data sheet has already been recorded by any employer in the county."

Compiler's Comments

1983 Amendment: In (1), in first sentence changed "department shall" to "department may".

Statement of Intent: The statement of intent attached to HB 862 (Ch. 574, L. 1983) provided: "A statement of intent is required for HB-862 because it affects the rulemaking and licensing authority of the Department of Health and Environmental Sciences [now Department of Environmental Quality] relating to possession and use of radioactive materials and devices utilizing such materials. Under current law, 75-3-202 [renumbered 50-79-202], MCA, mandates the department to adopt rules for general or specific licensing of persons to receive, possess or transfer radioactive materials and devices utilizing such materials. However, because of budgetary constraints, the department has been unable to implement the licensing program. HB-862 would give the department the discretion to adopt and enforce such rules when legislative appropriations make program implementation possible."

Preamble: The preamble attached to Ch. 471, L. 1995, provided: "WHEREAS, the federal government frequently regulates areas that are also subject to state regulation; and

WHEREAS, differing state and federal policy goals and unique state prerogatives frequently result in different levels of regulation, different standards, and different requirements being imposed by state and federal programs covering the same subject matter; and

WHEREAS, Montana must simultaneously move toward reducing redundant and unnecessary regulation that dulls the state's competitive advantage while being ever vigilant in the protection of the public's health, safety, and welfare; and

WHEREAS, Montana's administrative agencies should consider applicable federal standards when adopting, readopting, or amending rules with analogous federal counterparts; and

WHEREAS, Montana's administrative agencies should analyze whether analogous federal standards sufficiently protect the health, safety, and welfare of Montana's citizens; and

WHEREAS, as part of the formal rulemaking process, the public should be advised of the agencies' conclusions about whether analogous federal standards sufficiently protect the health, safety, and welfare of Montana citizens."

1995 Statement of Intent: The statement of intent attached to Ch. 471, L. 1995, provided: "A statement of intent is required for this bill in order to provide guidance to the board of health and environmental sciences [now board of environmental review], the department of health and environmental sciences [now department of environmental quality], and local units of government in complying with [this act].

The legislature intends that in addition to all requirements imposed by existing law and rules, the board or the department include as part of the initial publication and all subsequent publications of a rule a written finding if the rule in question contains any standards or requirements that exceed the standards or requirements imposed by comparable federal law.

If the rules are more stringent than comparable federal law, the written finding must include but is not limited to a discussion of the policy reasons and an analysis that supports the board's or department's decision that the proposed state standards or requirements protect public health or the environment of the state and that the state standards or requirements to be imposed can mitigate harm to the public health or the environment and are achievable under current technology. The department is not required to show that the federal regulation is inadequate to protect public health. The written finding must also include information from the hearing record regarding the costs to the regulated community directly attributable to the proposed state standard or requirement."

Effective Date: Section 23, Ch. 471, L. 1995, provided that this section is effective on passage and approval. Approved April 14, 1995.

Applicability: Section 22(1) and (3), Ch. 471, L. 1995, provided: "(1) [Sections 1 through 3] are intended to apply to any rule that is in effect, adopted, or amended, and that regulates those resources or activities for which the state has been given primary authority to regulate by federal authority pursuant to Title 75, chapter 2; Title 75, chapter 3 [renumbered Title 50, chapter 79]; Title 75, chapter 5; Title 75, chapter 6; or Title 75, chapter 10, as of [the effective date of this act] [April 14, 1995].

1983 Amendment: In (2), substituted "state special revenue fund" for "earmarked revenue fund".

Statement of Intent: The statement of intent attached to HB 203 (Ch. 242, L. 1983) provided: "A statement of intent is required for this bill because it delegates rulemaking authority to the Department of Health and Environmental Sciences [now Department of Environmental Quality]. The purpose of this bill is to authorize the State of Montana to participate in the Northwest Interstate Compact on Low-Level Radioactive Waste Management. Member states agree to adopt practices (primarily on-site inspections) to assure that low-level waste shipments conform to the packaging and transportation requirements of the state where the waste is to be disposed. As a member, Montana will be able to send its low-level wastes to a disposal site in Washington.

The Department of Health already has rulemaking authority (75-3-201(3)(b) [renumbered 50-79-201(3)(b)], MCA) for the regulation of low-level radioactive wastes. This bill makes that existing authority applicable to the implementation of the terms of the Compact. The Department is also authorized to assess fees for the recovery of the costs of on-site inspections. Fees are to be assessed for that purpose only."

ADMINISTRATION

Part 1
General

Part Attorney General's Opinions

Payment of Proportionate Share of Administrative Costs by Nonassumed Counties — Action to Recover Disputed Claims: Under 53-2-322 (now repealed), a nonassumed county is required to pay its proportionate share of administrative costs for protective services, including rent, adequate equipment, and supplies. The responsibility to pay a proportionate share, other than salaries, travel expenses, and indirect employee costs, is not capped at the amount paid in fiscal year 1987. An action to recover a disputed claim filed more than 6 months after denial of the claim is barred by the statute of limitations in 27-2-209. 45 A.G. Op. 23 (1994).

1995 Amendment: Chapter 546 in definition of Department substituted "department of public health and human services provided for in 2-15-2201" for "department of family services provided for in 2-15-2401"; and in definition of Director substituted "director of public health and human services provided for in 2-15-2201" for "director of family services provided for in 2-15-2401". Amendment effective July 1, 1995.

52-1-103. Powers and duties of department.

Compiler's Comments

2003 Amendment: Chapter 114 in (7) substituted "Interstate Compact for the Placement of Children" for "interstate compact for children". Amendment effective October 1, 2003.

2001 Amendment: Chapter 571 in (13) near beginning after "contract, as necessary" deleted "with the county board of welfare"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective July 1, 2001.

1997 Amendments: Chapter 171 inserted (3) requiring establishment of a system of councils; deleted former (8)(a) that read: "(a) make a written evaluation of each plan developed by the local family services advisory councils, as provided in 52-1-203, indicating those portions of each plan that will be implemented by the department, those portions that will not be implemented, and the reasons for not implementing those portions"; in (9), at end, deleted "as reflected in plans developed by the local family services advisory councils"; and made minor changes in style.

Chapter 472 in (11)(a) substituted reference to adults who have disabilities for reference to handicapped adults; and made minor changes in style.

Preamble: The preamble attached to Ch. 171, L. 1997, provided: "WHEREAS, the 54th Montana Legislature enacted a bill to combine several state agencies into a new department of public health and human services; and

WHEREAS, it would better serve the needs of Montana to combine the functions and duties and limit the number of advisory councils associated with the department of public health and human services."

1995 Amendments — Phrase Change: Section 21, Ch. 255, L. 1995, directed the Code Commissioner to change references in the MCA to a person who is developmentally disabled or to a developmentally disabled person to a person with developmental disabilities. The change was not to be made to the phrase "seriously developmentally disabled". In (4), the Code Commissioner has made the change.

Chapter 458 in (4), at beginning, inserted "register or". Amendment effective April 14, 1995.

Chapter 546 deleted former (3) that read: "(3) provide funding for and place youth alleged or adjudicated to be delinquent or in need of supervision who are referred or committed to the department"; deleted former (5) and (6) that read: "(5) administer youth correctional facilities;

(6) provide supervision, care, and control of youth released from a state youth correctional facility"; at end of (6) substituted "compact for children" for "compacts for children and delinquent youth"; deleted (14) and (15) that read: "(14) utilize at maximum efficiency the resources of state government in a coordinated effort to:

(a) provide for children in need of temporary protection or correctional services; and

(b) coordinate and apply the principles of modern institutional administration to the institutions in the department;

(15) subject to the functions of the department of administration, lease or purchase lands for use by institutions in the department and classify those lands to determine which are of such character as to be most profitably used for agricultural purposes, taking into consideration:

(a) the needs of all institutions in the department for the food products that can be grown or produced on the lands; and

(b) the relative value of agricultural programs in the treatment or rehabilitation of the persons confined in the institutions in the department"; deleted (17) that read: "(17) propose programs with specific goals and objectives to the legislature to meet the projected long-range needs of institutions in the department, including programs and facilities for the diagnosis, treatment, care, and aftercare of persons placed in institutions in the department"; in (13), after "41-3-1126", deleted "41-5-527 through 41-5-529"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective July 1, 1995.

1993 Amendment: Chapter 91 in (11)(a) and (11)(b) substituted reference to local family services advisory councils for reference to local youth services advisory councils. Amendment effective July 1, 1993.

1989 Amendments: Chapter 83 in (6) substituted "severely disabled persons" for "physically disabled persons".

Chapter 692 inserted (7) relating to Montana Child Care Act.

1987 Statement of Intent: The statement of intent attached to Ch. 609, L. 1987, provided: "A statement of intent is required for this bill because section 5 [52-1-103] grants rulemaking authority to the department of family services [now department of public health and human services] to adopt rules necessary to carry out the purposes of sections 3 through 10 and 15 through 19 [41-3-1126, 52-1-101 through 52-1-103, 52-1-105 (now repealed), 52-1-201 through 52-1-203, (52-1-202 and 52-1-203 now repealed), and 41-5-525 through 41-5-529] (renumbered 41-5-121 through 41-5-125).

Rules are primarily necessary to implement sections 7 and 8 [52-1-202 and 52-1-203, both now repealed] of the bill. These sections require that a state youth services council [now state family services council] and local youth services advisory councils [now local family services advisory councils] be established to advise the director of the department on policies related to children and youth, to make an annual written review and evaluation of local needs and services, and to develop a local plan for a system of community-based services for children and youth.

The rules to be adopted would address:

(1) the composition, membership requirements, and operating procedures for the state and local advisory councils;

(2) procedures for the development and format of the annual written review and evaluation of services;

(3) procedures for the preparation and format of the state plan; and

(4) other guidelines necessary for the administration and operation of the state and local advisory councils.

It is also intended that the department adopt rules necessary to carry out its duties and responsibilities set forth in section 5 [52-1-103]. These rules will be adopted in a manner consistent with the expressed purposes of the legislation and the existing rulemaking authority of the department of social and rehabilitation services that are transferred to the department of family services [functions now consolidated in department of public health and human services].

In addition, the department will adopt rules governing the establishment and administration of youth placement committees as provided in sections 15 through 19 [41-5-525 through 41-5-529, renumbered 41-5-121 through 41-5-125]."

Sections Not Codified: Section 14, Ch. 609, L. 1987, dealt with county contribution for salaries and travel of protective services employees for fiscal year 1987.

Section 20, Ch. 609, L. 1987, dealt with retention of employment status of state employees transferred to the Department of Family Services (now Department of Public Health and Human Services).

Case Notes

Lack of District Court Jurisdiction in Claim for Damages — Failure to Exhaust Administrative Remedies: Gilpins initiated suit for damages resulting from temporary suspension of their day-care license by the Department of Family Services (now Department of Public Health and Human Services), contending that, under 3-5-302, jurisdiction was in the District Court because the action involved a civil claim against the state for payment of money. However, the Supreme Court held that the District Court properly dismissed the claim for lack of jurisdiction because Gilpins failed to exhaust all administrative remedies available within the agency, as required by 2-4-702, and because there was no showing made pursuant to 2-4-701 that a review of the agency decision by a hearings examiner would not provide an adequate remedy. Gilpin v. St., 249 M 37, 812 P2d 1265, 48 St. Rep. 567 (1991).

Chapter Compiler's Comments

Preamble: The preamble attached to Ch. 301, L. 1993, provided: "WHEREAS, the Joint Interim Subcommittee on Children and Families, established by House Joint Resolution No. 54 of the 1991 Regular Session, studied the following issues: the existing and the ideal continuum of services for children and families, especially programs for those families that are at risk of out-of-home placement of their children; the feasibility of instituting early identification and intervention programs for at-risk families; interagency coordination of programs and services for at-risk children and families in Montana; and the feasibility of establishing a statutory legislative oversight committee to review and monitor public and private programs and services for children and families;

WHEREAS, the Joint Interim Subcommittee on Children and Families concluded its study assignments by recommending numerous policy and programmatic changes related to the above issues, including the establishment of an oversight committee that could monitor the implementation of legislative recommendations or coordinate further study of emerging issues related to programs for children and families in Montana.

THEREFORE, the Legislature of the State of Montana finds it is appropriate to establish a joint oversight committee on children and families [now Children, Families, Health, and Human Services Interim Committee]."

Retroactive Foster Care Payments: In the absence of a determination that foster care assistance was improperly denied, neither a County Department of Public Welfare nor the Department of Social and Rehabilitation Services (now Department of Public Health and Human Services) is required to retroactively pay foster care costs on behalf of a relinquished child. Where there is a determination made that foster care assistance was improperly denied, only the foster home involved is entitled to foster care payments. 38 A.G. Op. 11 (1979).

Public and Private Placement Agencies: County Departments of Public Welfare may not deny foster care payments solely because the child receiving foster care has been relinquished to a private rather than public placement agency. If eligibility is established, County Departments of Public Welfare are required to approve foster care payments to a foster home on behalf of a child who has been relinquished to a private placement agency. 38 A.G. 1995 Amendments: Chapter 18 deleted former definition of emotionally disturbed child that read: ""Emotionally disturbed child" means a child determined by a psychologist, psychiatrist, licensed social worker, or special education child study team (established under rules adopted by the superintendent of public instruction to implement Title 20, chapter 7, part 4) to have:

(i) an identifiable mental health problem as identified in a nationally recognized classification system or as defined in 20-7-401(8); and

(ii) a substantial impairment, evident for a reasonable length of time, that is characterized by a dysfunction in any of the following areas:

(A) relationships;

(B) behavior;

(C) cognition; or

(D) education.

(b) The nationally recognized classification system referred to in subsection (3)(a)(i) must be one recognized by rules established by the department"; and deleted former definition of public assistance that read: ""Public assistance" or "assistance" means any type of monetary or other assistance furnished under this title to a person by a state or county agency, regardless of the original source of the assistance."

Chapter 458 in definition of child welfare services, after "abused", deleted "dependent"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective April 14, 1995.

Chapter 546 in definition of Department substituted "department of public health and human services provided for in 2-15-2201" for "department of family services provided for in 2-15-2401"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective July 1, 1995.

1991 Amendment: In (3)(a)(i) changed subsection reference. Amendment effective July 1, 1991.

1987 Amendments: Chapter 447 inserted definition of emotionally disturbed child.

Chapter 609 at end of definition of child welfare services substituted "abused, dependent, or neglected children" for "homeless, dependent, and neglected children and children in danger of becoming delinquent"; deleted former (2) that read: "(2) "Child welfare worker" means staff personnel who have had education and training in the field of child welfare and who are qualified and accepted as such in conformity with the standards established by the department"; and substituted definition of Department of Family Services for definition of Department of Social and Rehabilitation Services and corrected internal reference.

1987 Statement of Intent: The statement of intent attached to Ch. 447, L. 1987, provided: "A statement of intent is required for this bill because the purpose of this bill is to allow the department of social and rehabilitation services [now department of public health and human services] to develop rules for identifying youth who are emotionally disturbed. The department shall use a nationally recognized classification system such as the Diagnostic and Statistical Manual of Mental Disorders, 3rd Edition (DSM-III) to identify mental health problems used to define "emotionally disturbed child"."

Preamble: The preamble attached to Ch. 326, L. 1995, provided: "WHEREAS, the best interests and future well-being of Montana's children and families continue to be paramount considerations in maintaining the health and prosperity of this state; and

WHEREAS, according to data supplied by the Department of Family Services' [now Department of Public Health and Human Services] foster care payment system, over 500 identified children have been in continuous out-of-home placement for 2 years or longer; and

WHEREAS, it is in the interests of the Legislature and the people of the state of Montana that all children in custody of the Department of Family Services [now Department of Public Health and Human Services] have a lifelong family connection, either by a safe and productive return to their birth family or, if that is not possible, by finding those children a permanent home; and

WHEREAS, the Joint Oversight Committee on Children and Families has recommended development of a state policy and plan for permanent placement for children in the state's child welfare system; and

WHEREAS, Montana's Uniform Adoption Act, as enacted in 1957 and revised periodically, may again be in need of amendment or further revision to address the problem of permanent placement of Montana's children."

Interim Review of Adoption Law: Section 2, Ch. 326, L. 1995, provided: "(1) As part of the implementation of a state permanent placement policy and plan for children as required under [section 1] [52-2-121], the department shall conduct a study of Montana adoption laws and policy. The study must include but is not limited to a review of Montana's current adoption laws and the Uniform Adoption Act of 1994 adopted by the national conference of commissioners on uniform state laws. The department shall facilitate the study through appointment of a volunteer advisory committee composed of persons representing groups or associations interested in the various aspects of policies pertaining to permanent placement of children and to adoption. The department may provide staff, facilities, and related expertise in conducting the study. The advisory committee shall:

(a) review the provisions of Montana's current adoption laws and the Uniform Adoption Act of 1994;

(b) identify areas of Montana adoption law that may need amendment, revision, or restructuring in order to implement the policy and plan for permanent placement of children developed under [section 1] [52-2-121];

(c) identify any other aspects of Montana adoption law in which revision, amendment, or replacement would facilitate or improve the adoption process;

(d) coordinate with the Montana supreme court regarding the permanent placement study and the court's federal court improvement grant; and

(e) report any recommendations or suggestions to the department for subsequent report to the legislature.

(2) Upon receipt of any committee recommendations or suggestions, the department shall submit the findings, along with any related department suggestions and recommendations, as part of the permanent placement report required under [section 3] [not codified]."

Part 3
Multiagency Service Placement Plan

Part Compiler's Comments

Multiagency Children's Services Initiative: Sections 1 through 4, Ch. 416, L. 2001, provided: "Section 1. Purpose. The legislature finds that it is necessary to immediately direct coordinated efforts to provide services to children with serious emotional disturbances who are in need of integrated services from multiple agencies. The legislature directs that the respective agencies engage in unified planning to further develop a continuum of services to reduce the use of high-cost, highly restrictive, out-of-home residential placements. The legislature directs that concentrated efforts be made to bring together the respective agencies that provide multiagency services to children with serious emotional disturbances for the purpose of containing costs and increasing the capacity of communities to serve these children in the least restrictive environment. These efforts are intended to parallel and supplement efforts to develop long-term structural changes in the public mental health system.

Section 2. Coordination of integrated multiagency services for children with serious emotional disturbances. (1) The department of public health and human services shall work with the office of public instruction, the department of corrections, the department of justice, and youth courts to coordinate responsibility for integrated multiagency services for children with serious emotional disturbances. The collaboration may include:

(a) pooling funding from federal, state, and local sources, to the extent possible, to maximize the most cost-effective use of funds to provide the appropriate services to children with serious emotional disturbances and multiagency needs in the least restrictive environment;

(b) applying for any federal waivers necessary to provide necessary services or to pool funds to achieve the purpose of this section;

(c) providing for multiagency data collection and analysis of data that is relevant to the use of services based on client needs and outcomes and using the analysis in the decisionmaking process;

(d) developing mechanisms for the pooling of human and fiscal resources; and

(e) providing training and technical assistance, as funds permit, at the local level regarding governance and the development and delivery of integrated multiagency children's services to children with serious emotional disturbances.

(2) The department of public health and human services shall identify the children with serious emotional disturbances:

(a) who are using the highest proportion of fiscal resources in the public mental health system; and

(b) who are receiving services out of state; or

(c) who, in order to be served in state or in the child's home community, may require services or who have required services in the past:

(i) from the child protective services system;

(ii) from the developmental disabilities system;

(iii) for mental health services as a youth adjudicated in need of intervention or delinquent from the juvenile correctional system;

(iv) in day treatment or special education in school;

(v) from public assistance; or

(vi) from the chemical dependency system.

(3) The department of public health and human services shall identify the children by community to facilitate organization or identification of local children's service agencies and providers to develop care and treatment plans for these children at a cost less than the current funding required for the children. Care and treatment plans must identify the least restrictive placements, as close to home as possible, the services required, and the responsible lead agency.

(4) The department of public health and human services shall report on its progress and any findings and recommendations to the governor's budget office and the children, families, health, and human services interim committee at least every 6 months.

Section 3. Provider networks. (1) Any licensed mental health provider willing to participate in this initiative, subject to the limitations in law or rule pursuant to each program, must be allowed initially to participate in a provider network.

(2) (a) All providers who choose to participate in the provider network shall work in alignment with the department of public health and human services, the mental health oversight advisory council, and any existing local interagency children's service groups to determine the core services that must be available in a provider network.

(b) The provider network is responsible to coordinate efforts with the department of public health and human services in developing performance-based outcomes and standards of care and developing mechanisms for ensuring that standards are met by all providers in the network.

(3) Providers may provide services within areas that are defined in any contract for services. A provider must be part of a provider network, with the exception of a provider who has been granted an out-of-network waiver by the department of public health and human services, to provide services pursuant to [section 2] [not codified].

(4) The department of public health and human services shall maintain listings of local, regional, and statewide provider networks.

Section 4. Long-term transition to regional mental health system. The department of public health and human services shall work with the mental health oversight advisory council to respond to technical assistance recommendations received by the department to define and design new mental health structures in order to develop a continuum of core services for children with serious emotional disturbances that is integrated with other children's services and to coordinate any development of future programs for mental health services for children and adults." These sections were effective April 28, 2001, and terminate June 30, 2003.

1993 Statement of Intent: The statement of intent attached to Ch. 324, L. 1993, provided: "A statement of intent is necessary for this bill because [section 8] [52-2-308] requires the department of family services [now department of public health and human services] to adopt rules. The legislature intends that the department particularly adopt rules implementing [sections 6 and 7] [52-2-306, now repealed, and 52-2-307, now repealed]. Rules implementing [section 6] [52-2-306, now repealed] should combine the review and approval process required by this bill into the current processes used by the department and the youth placement committees. The rules adopted to implement [section 7] [52-2-307, now repealed] should provide a process similar to the request for proposal (RFP) process used previously by the department in placing groups of children with providers. The legislature intends that implementation of this bill not duplicate similar initiatives by other state agencies."

WHEREAS, the 1993 Legislature expressed a desire to provide services to these children in their homes or communities whenever possible and to use out-of-state providers as a last resort; and

WHEREAS, subsequent legislatures have strengthened the policy first established in 1993 by encouraging development of an array of in-state services so that children placed out of state may return home and children in the state can remain in their homes, community, or state; and

WHEREAS, the state of Montana has sought and obtained federal funds to help plan for local services that can keep children with multiagency service needs in their homes and communities; and

WHEREAS, information from the Department of Public Health and Human Services indicates that out-of-state placement of children continues and has increased in recent years."

2003 Amendment: Chapter 118 substituted high-risk child with multiagency service needs for child with multiagency service needs as defined term, after "age" inserted "who is seriously emotionally disturbed, who is placed or who imminently may be placed in an out-of-home setting", substituted "collaboration" for "services that are available", and after "agency" inserted "in order to address the child's needs" and inserted (b) providing that high-risk child with multiagency services needs does not include child incarcerated in state youth facility; substituted least restrictive and most appropriate setting for least restrictive setting as defined term and before "child" inserted "high-risk" and at end of (b)(v) after "treatment" deleted "or does not adversely affect the child's treatment"; deleted former definitions of local agency and managed care that read: "(3) "Local agency" means a local interagency staffing group formed pursuant to 52-2-203 or parents who are seeking placement of a child with multiagency service needs and who is suffering from mental, behavioral, or emotional disorders.

(4) "Managed care" means control of the provision of services to a defined population through a planned delivery system"; in definition of provider before "child" inserted "high-risk"; deleted former definition of request for proposals that read: "(6) "Request for proposals" has the meaning as defined in 18-4-301"; inserted definition of system of care; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective July 1, 2003.

Preamble: The preamble attached to Ch. 190, L. 2009, provided: "WHEREAS, the 2003 Legislature directed state agencies to develop a statewide system of care for children with multiagency service needs; and

WHEREAS, the state has worked to implement that directive by developing Kids Management Authorities in a number of communities around the state; and

WHEREAS, Kids Management Authorities have been developed through a combination of grant funds from the federal Substance Abuse and Mental Health Services Administration and state and local funds; and

WHEREAS, federal grant funds are rapidly diminishing and will run out in the next biennium, while the state and local matching requirements for those funds must be significantly increased this biennium in order to sustain Kids Management Authorities at the community level; and

WHEREAS, the Legislature has provided clear direction to state agencies that treatment for children with multiagency service needs should be family centered, should attempt to provide treatment for children in their homes and communities, and should avoid out-of-home and out-of-state placements when possible; and

WHEREAS, the Legislature wants treatment for children to provide positive outcomes and value for the funds spent on treatment; and

WHEREAS, the Legislature created a children's system of care planning committee in section 52-2-303, MCA, to oversee the development of the statewide system of care effort; and

WHEREAS, the Legislature would benefit from more information on the progress made toward a statewide system of care and from recommendations on whether this effort should be sustained, modified, or abandoned."

Report to Legislature — Purpose — Requirements: Section 1, Ch. 190, L. 2009, provided: "(1) (a) The children's system of care planning committee established in 52-2-303 shall study progress achieved to date in developing a statewide system of care for high-risk children with multiagency service needs. The committee shall prepare a report and recommendations for the legislature and provide the information to the appropriate interim committee no later than July 1, 2010.

(b) In preparing the report, the system of care planning committee shall take special note of input from communities and from families and children involved in the system of care.

(2) The report must:

(a) detail the progress made in developing the system of care, including the communities and areas currently being served, the agencies involved in each effort, and the organizational approaches being used in the communities;

(b) provide a summary of the number of total clients served, by community, and detail the types of services being provided;

(c) provide a summary of the federal, state, and local funds spent in operating the system of care and of the cost of services provided by the system of care; and

(d) include an analysis of the effectiveness of the children's system of care, along with a summary of the barriers that exist in further developing the system of care.

(3) The recommendations must:

(a) state whether and how kids management authorities or their equivalent should be structured, staffed, and funded, including but not limited to identifying the agencies that should be involved, how their involvement could be encouraged or required, and how they could most effectively participate in the process;

(b) define a clear role for kids management authorities, including whether or how the authorities should be involved in:

(i) coordinating services to individual children at the local level;

(ii) encouraging and ensuring that state agency practices are family centered;

(iii) providing assistance and advocacy for families in navigating the array of state services for children;

(c) identify how agency funding may be better blended to provide services to multiagency children, including but not limited to an analysis of whether the state should seek waivers for use of medicaid funds or funds provided through Title IV-E of the Social Security Act;

(d) provide a clear statement of which children and family populations should be served by the system of care;

(e) define how local governments may or should be involved in the system of care; and

(f) define how and state whether the wraparound process of providing a unique set of services that are based on a child's and family's needs and strengths will be connected to the system of care, including recommendations on how the wraparound process will be provided, to whom it will be provided, who should provide it, and how it will be funded.

(4) The study and report must be completed within the budget approved for the department of public health and human services for the biennium beginning July 1, 2009."

2003 Amendment: Chapter 118 in (1) at end substituted "children's system of care planning committee" for "multiagency service placement plan committee"; at end of (2)(a) inserted "representing the mental health program"; inserted (2)(b) through (2)(e) requiring appointees representing child protective services, the developmental disability program, the chemical dependency treatment program, and representatives of families with high-risk children with multiagency service needs, service providers, or other interested persons or agencies; in (2)(f) after "public instruction" inserted "representing education"; inserted (2)(h) requiring appointee of youth justice council; inserted (2)(i) requiring appointee of supreme court representing youth courts; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective July 1, 2003.

1995 Amendments — Composite Section: Chapter 418 in (2)(d) substituted "department of public health" for "department of health and environmental sciences". Amendment effective July 1, 1995. The amendment by Ch. 546 rendered the amendment by Ch. 418 void.

Chapter 546 in (2)(a) substituted "department of public health and human services" for "department"; in (2)(c) substituted "department of corrections" for "department of corrections and human services"; deleted (2)(d) and (2)(e) that read: "(d) an appointee of the director of the department of health and environmental sciences; and

(e) an appointee of the director of the department of social and rehabilitation services"; in (3) substituted "department of public health and human services" for "department"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective July 1, 1995.

Attorney General's Opinions

Retroactive Foster Care Payments: In the absence of a determination that foster care assistance was improperly denied, neither a county department of public welfare nor the Department of Social and Rehabilitation Services (now Department of Public Health and Human Services) is required to retroactively pay foster care costs on behalf of a relinquished child. Where there is a determination made that foster care assistance was improperly denied, only the foster home involved is entitled to foster care payments. 38 A.G. Op. 11 (1979).

Public and Private Placement Agencies: County departments of public welfare may not deny foster care payments solely because the child receiving foster care has been relinquished to a private rather than public placement agency. If eligibility is established, county departments of public welfare are required to approve foster care payments to a foster home on behalf of a child who has been relinquished to a private placement agency. 38 A.G. Op. 11 (1979).

1985 Amendments: Chapter 15 deleted former (1)(g) that read: "seek public input on the plan prior to its adoption and implementation".

Chapter 177 inserted (1)(h) requiring Department to administer funds allocated for youth alcohol and drug treatment; and in (2)(a) inserted "or private organizations".

Chapter 531 in first sentence of (3) substituted "treatment in youth foster care homes and youth group homes other than aftercare homes" for "treatment in district youth guidance homes, shelter care programs, and foster care homes".

1985 Statement of Intent: The statement of intent attached to Ch. 177, L. 1985, provided: "A statement of intent is desirable for this bill to clarify the existing rulemaking authority granted to the department of social and rehabilitation services [now department of public health and human services] under section 41-3-1103(2)(c), MCA, as it applies to the proposed amendment to section 41-3-1103(1), MCA.

The department of social and rehabilitation services [now department of public health and human services] may adopt rules to carry out the administration of all funds appropriated and allocated to the department to pay for residential alcohol and drug treatment for indigent youths in need of care, youths in need of supervision [now youth in need of intervention], and delinquent youths who require such treatment.

It is contemplated that the rules shall address the following:

(1) criteria for determining whether residential treatment for alcohol and drug abuse is necessary and appropriate in each case;

(2) criteria for determining whether the youth's family is indigent; and

(3) procedures for administering the funds."

1983 Statement of Intent: The statement of intent attached to HB 24 (Ch. 465, L. 1983) provided: "House Bill 24 requires a statement of intent because it authorizes the Department of Social and Rehabilitation Services [now Department of Public Health and Human Services] to adopt rules to implement statutory changes in the delivery of services to youths.

The Legislature contemplates that the rules should address the following, among other things:

1. Consideration of aftercare programs for youth under the department's supervision.

2. Consideration of standards for facilities housing youth in need of care, youth in need of supervision [now youth in need of intervention], and delinquent youth. Such standards should be considered in licensing and delivery of service.

3. Consideration of measures associated with the allocation of placement budgets to judicial districts, with such measures including data on placement history and placement trends.

4. Consideration of the proper allocation of annual budgets for the out-of-home care of youth in need of supervision [now youth in need of intervention] and delinquent youth. The funding formula used in budget allocations should include:

a. the total population of the judicial district;

b. the total youth population of the judicial district;

c. the total number and costs of placements in public facilities and out-of-home care facilities;

d. trends in population, placements, and local economics.

5. Consideration of measures to investigate parental contributions.

6. Consideration of specific measures for licensing the various youth facilities, including: facility acquisition, facility design, group home staffing, staff training, service goals and design, quality of services, client placement procedure, client rights and privileges, client grievance procedure, provider grievance procedure, accounting procedures including accounting of client financial resources, health and safety standards including water and waste disposal, food service, and laundry.

The department should also develop plans that inform youth courts about budgeted amounts available for placements during the fiscal year within the limits of appropriations. The department will on a regular basis advise the youth courts on the status of such budgeted amounts. Payment for placements will be in accordance with 41-3-104 [renumbered 41-3-1122]."

2001 Amendment — Coordination Void: Chapter 571 in (2) substituted text regarding administrative fee paid to department for former (2) that read: "(2) On or before the 20th of each month, the department of public health and human services or the department of corrections shall present a claim to the county of residence of the youth for no more than one-half of the nonfederal share of the payments made during the month. The county shall make reimbursement to the department within 20 days after the claim is presented"; deleted former (3) through (5) that read: "(3) Except as provided in subsection (4), when a county's level of expenditure for any year reaches the level of reimbursement for foster care in fiscal year 1987, the county has no further obligation for foster care expenditures.

(4) If a county's level of expenditure for foster care in fiscal year 1987 was $10,000 or less, the county's level of expenditure for purposes of determining the county's reimbursement specified in subsection (3) is the level of expenditures for fiscal year 1987 or the average of expenditures for fiscal years 1984 through 1987, whichever is less.

(5) A county that was state-assumed prior to 1987 but that at a later date reassumes responsibility pursuant to 53-2-811 is responsible for reimbursement of foster care expenditures up to the county's calculated level of expenditures for fiscal year 1987 as if the county had not been state-assumed"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective July 1, 2001.

The amendment to this section made by Ch. 571, L. 2001, was purportedly voided by sec. 46, Ch. 571, L. 2001, a coordination section, which was itself rendered void by sec. 255, Ch. 574, L. 2001, also a coordination section.

1997 Amendment: Chapter 550 near beginning of (1) substituted "youth in need of intervention" for "youth in need of supervision"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective July 1, 1997.

Saving Clause: Section 79, Ch. 550, L. 1997, was a saving clause.

1995 Amendment: Chapter 546 in (1) substituted "department of public health and human services or the department of corrections" for "department of family services", after third "department" inserted "making the placement", and after "rate established by the department" inserted "of public health and human services"; in (2), in first sentence after "department" inserted "of public health and human services or the department of corrections"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective July 1, 1995.

1993 Amendments: Chapter 561 inserted (5) clarifying responsibility for foster care expenditures of a county that reassumes responsibility pursuant to 53-2-811. Amendment effective July 1, 1993.

Chapter 610 in (6), after "41-3-1115", inserted "or when applicable, 41-3-1010". Amendment effective July 1, 1993.

1987 Amendment: In (1) substituted provision that placement be made by Department of Family Services that was formerly made by the Youth Court or Department of Social and Rehabilitation Services; in first sentence of (2), after "one-half", inserted "of the nonfederal share of"; inserted (3) and (4) relating to county reimbursement for foster care expenditures; and in (5), after "the youth is placed", deleted "under the supervision of the department or placed" and at end, after "department", deleted "or the department pays for the care of the youth as set forth in this section".

1985 Amendment: In (1) substituted present language for "Whenever agreements are entered into by the department or the court for placing a youth in need of care, a youth in need of supervision, or a delinquent youth in a youth care facility, the department shall pay by its check or draft each month from any funds appropriated for that purpose the entire amount agreed upon for board, clothing, personal needs, treatment, and room of the youth".

1983 Amendment: In (1), after "department" inserted "or the court", substituted "a youth in need of supervision, or a delinquent youth in a youth care facility" for "in a licensed family foster home, child care agency, group home, or treatment facility", and inserted "treatment" near end of subsection; in (3), substituted "youth care facility" for "licensed family foster home, child care agency, group home, or treatment facility".

1981 Amendment: Deleted "private" before "treatment facility" in (1); inserted "no more than" before "one-half the payments" in (2); added subsection (3) requiring Department to review foster care placements; made minor changes in grammar.

Statement of Intent: The statement of intent attached to SB 228 (Ch. 297, L. 1981) provided: "A statement of intent is required for this bill because in addition to amending sections 41-3-104, 41-3-501, 41-5-801 [renumbered 41-3-1122; 41-3-1102; and 41-3-1121, now repealed], and 53-4-112 [renumbered 52-2-112], the bill creates rulemaking authority for the Department of Social and Rehabilitation Services [now Department of Public Health and Human Services] to administer a review of children in foster care under the department's supervision or for whom the department is making payment under section 41-3-104(2) or 41-5-801(2) [renumbered 41-3-1122(2); and 41-3-1121(2), now repealed].

It is the intent of this bill to indicate the legislature's support of permanency planning for children in foster care and to direct the department to continue its efforts in this area. This bill is intended to encourage reduction of the numbers of children in foster care; to expediently return children to their natural homes when possible, or to free the children for alternate permanent placements; thereby assuring the appropriate utilization of public funds and that the best interest of children in placement in Montana are being met by the department's program.

Rulemaking is primarily necessary to implement Section 2 [41-5-807] and subsection (3) of Section 1 of the bill [41-3-104] [renumbered 41-3-1122]. These sections require that a foster care review committee be established by the court to conduct reviews of children in foster care and provide written reports to the youth court and the department. Rules would identify which children are to be reviewed, and would list precisely what information is to be shared with the review committee, when the committees are to conduct business, the general guidelines for the committees' operation, the time limitations for conducting the reviews, and who may participate in the review. As for the information to be reported, the rules will ask for:

(1) summary reports of the review to include the recommendations of the committee regarding the continuation or discontinuation of foster care and reasons; treatment needs of the child; and court action;

(2) sufficient information to allow the tracking of the reviews; to facilitate: follow-up services, compliance with court orders, agency decisions, and response to committee recommendations; and to provide necessary reports on the department's foster care program."

Incomplete Form Contract When Signed — Unenforceable Contract: Pearson was responsible for placement of youths in need of supervision for Youth Court services and sought to place a youth with Findleys in their foster home. Findley told Pearson that they would need $41 a day to care for the youth and asked Pearson to sign a written contract so that Youth Court services would ensure their $41-a-day payment. Findley produced a form contract with blank spaces for the child's name, name of the contracting party, and rate of compensation for the placement. The extent to which the blanks were filled in was disputed, but Pearson testified that he told the Findleys that he was responsible only for placement, that reimbursement was administered through the Department of Social and Rehabilitation Services (now Department of Public Health and Human Services), and that he could not guarantee a daily payment rate. The Department informed Findleys that the standard daily rate was $11.63. Findleys later brought a claim for contract damages against Youth Court services. The District Court properly held that the form contract was not enforceable because it was substantially incomplete when the parties signed it, with neither the date nor the rate amount having been filled in. There was no evidence that Youth Court services ratified the contract. Equitable estoppel did not apply because Findleys knew within 1 month that they would not be paid $41 a day, but instead of terminating the foster care relationship, they continued for nearly 5 years with no assurance that they would ever receive more than the standard rate for foster care. Findley v. District Court, 277 M 242, 921 P2d 870, 53 St. Rep. 627 (1996).

Placement of Children With Christian Foster Parents Not Violative of First Amendment Establishment Clause: Appellant claimed that by placing children with Christian foster parents who maintained their own ministry, the state violated the establishment clause of the first amendment to the U.S. Constitution (similar to Art. II, sec. 5, Mont. Const.) prohibiting government support of religion. According to Lemon v. Kurtzman, 403 US 602, 29 L Ed 2d 745, 91 S Ct 2105 (1971), state aid is constitutional if: (1) it has a secular purpose; (2) its primary effect neither advances nor inhibits religion; and (3) it does not foster government entanglement in religion. In this case, aid provided for foster parental care was clearly secular; the primary effect of the placement and attendant payments was that the children were provided with a safe, loving, and secure home and parents, which did not advance or inhibit religion; and placement and payments did not excessively entangle the state in religion because foster parents, whether ministers or not, may do as they please with foster care reimbursements and do not have to account for the money. Thus, no constitutional violation occurred. In re S.P., 241 M 190, 786 P2d 642, 47 St. Rep. 190 (1990).

Valid Memorandum of Agreement Allowing State to Investigate Child Abuse Allegations on Reservation and Pursue Substantiation Proceedings Against Tribal Member: The Assiniboine and Sioux Tribes of the Fort Peck Reservation entered a memorandum of agreement with the Bureau of Indian Affairs and the Montana Department of Public Health and Human Services (DPHHS), allowing DPHHS to place Indian children with enrolled tribal members living on the reservation. DPHHS subsequently placed a Minnesota Indian child with the child's great-aunt Hanna on the Fort Peck Reservation, but the placement was terminated after DPHHS received reports that the child was being abused or neglected. DPHHS subsequently initiated an investigation into the cause of the abuse and issued a substantiated report that Hanna had abused or neglected the child. Hanna moved for a fair hearing, and because no criminal charges had been filed, DPHHS began the fair hearing process. Hanna then moved to dismiss the substantiation proceeding on jurisdictional grounds. The hearings officer held that the tribe maintained exclusive jurisdiction over Indian youth and that DPHHS's substantiation proceedings interfered with tribal sovereignty. DPHHS appealed the decision in District Court, arguing that pursuant to the memorandum of agreement, DPHHS had jurisdiction to issue the substantiated report under state law and policy because DPHHS had licensed Hanna as a kinship foster care provider in the first place. The District Court agreed and reversed the hearings officer's decision. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. The purpose of the agreement was to allow eligible Indian children on the Fort Peck Reservation to receive services and foster care maintenance payments, and the agreement was a valid, federally authorized agreement. Under the agreement, DPHHS was assigned the responsibility of investigating allegations of abuse and neglect, documenting conclusions of the investigation in a final report, and making the final decision about an individual's licensing status, and the agreement did not contemplate tribal jurisdiction regarding these issues. Therefore, DPHHS had jurisdiction to pursue substantiation proceedings against Hanna. In re Fair Hearing of Hanna, 2010 MT 38, 355 Mont. 236, 227 P.3d 596.

Statement of Intent: The statement of intent attached to HB 646 (Ch. 606, L. 1981) provided: "House Bill 646 generally clarifies the state laws relating to child day-care facilities. (Title 53, chapter 4, part 5) [renumbered to Title 52, chapter 2, part 7]

Levels of care are specifically defined:

(1) Day-care center provides care for 13 or more children. (53-4-501, MCA) [renumbered 52-2-702(1) and 52-2-703]

(2) Group day-care home provides care for 7 to 12 children. (53-4-501, MCA) [renumbered 52-2-702(1) and 52-2-703]

(3) Family day-care home provides care for three to six children from separate families. (53-4-501, MCA) [renumbered 52-2-702(1) and 52-2-703]

The term "day-care facility" has been expanded to include all levels of care. (53-4-501, MCA) [renumbered 52-2-702(1) and 52-2-703]

House Bill 646 in sections 53-4-501 [renumbered 52-2-702(1) and 52-2-703] and 53-4-502 [renumbered 52-2-721], MCA, eliminates the requirement for family day-care homes and group day-care homes to be licensed, and requires a provider to simply register with the Department of Social and Rehabilitation Services [now Department of Public Health and Human Services] [and certify] that they comply with minimal state regulations for quality care.

Rulemaking authority. Although House Bill 646 amends 53-4-501 through 53-4-516 [renumbered to Title 52, chapter 2, part 7, except 53-4-516, now repealed], MCA, the present law does give the Department of Social and Rehabilitation Services [now Department of Public Health and Human Services] the authority for the purposes of Title 53, chapter 4, part 5 [renumbered to Title 52, chapter 2, part 7], to license child day-care facilities and for rulemaking authority in relation to licensing. However, because of the new provisions in this act and the fact rules have not been revised since 1965, it is anticipated new rules will be promulgated.

Rules relating to licensing or registration will address the following areas:

(1) Family day-care homes and group day-care homes — character, suitability, qualifications of applicants to care for children; programs and practices for health, safety, transportation, development; ages and numbers of children that may be cared for in a day-care facility.

(2) Day-care centers — including the above — numbers of staff required for adequate supervision; physical facilities and equipment; admission procedures; health supervision of staff, essential records, general financial ability and competence of an applicant to provide necessary care and maintain prescribed standards. Availability of public liability insurance and fire insurance is applicable to all levels of care. (53-4-508, MCA) [renumbered 52-2-723]

(3) Rules dealing with health and safety will be developed with the assistance of the Department of Health and Environmental Sciences [now Department of Public Health and Human Services]. (53-4-506, MCA) [renumbered 52-2-725]

(4) Physical well-being and safety of the children in day-care facilities is provided by the state Fire Marshal [now state fire prevention and investigation program of the Department of Justice] who shall adopt standards for fire and life safety. (53-4-505, MCA) [renumbered 52-2-734]

It is the intention of the Legislature that the rates payable to a day-care facility under section 15 [see 52-2-713] be set after the appropriation level has been determined by the Legislature."

Amendment effective July 1, 2002.

Applicability: Section 5, Ch. 505, L. 2001, provided: "[This act] applies to day-care centers, as defined in 52-2-703(3)(a)(ii), operated on or after July 1, 2002." The reference to 52-2-703(3)(a)(ii) originally referred to care provided to children on an irregular basis.

1997 Amendment: Chapter 318 in definition of child, at end, inserted "or a person with special needs, as defined by the department, who is under 18 years of age or is 18 years of age and a full-time student expected to complete an educational program by 19 years of age"; inserted definitions of professional training, school age, and school-age care; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective April 21, 1997.

Preamble: The preamble attached to Ch. 318, L. 1997, provided: "WHEREAS, the "traditional" American family with the father working and the mother at home to care for the children now constitutes only 25% of all American families; and

WHEREAS, an estimated 40,000 of 70,000 Montana children under 6 years of age need child care, while only about 25,000 licensed or registered child-care slots are available; and

WHEREAS, a shortage of before- and after-school programs for school-age children places children at risk for delinquency and teen pregnancy; and

WHEREAS, the availability of day care is critical to the success of welfare-to-work programs; and

WHEREAS, high-quality care is essential to the healthy development of Montana's children, and professional training for child-care providers is the single most effective way to ensure quality care; and

WHEREAS, funding limitations prevent many child-care providers from starting day-care or school-age care businesses and from obtaining professional training."

1997 Statement of Intent: The statement of intent attached to Ch. 318, L. 1997, provided: "A statement of intent is required for this bill because 52-2-711, as amended, directs the department of public health and human services to adopt rules to administer the grant program. It is the intent of the legislature that grant awards be consistent with the legislative priorities set forth in this bill and that additional grants be consistent with the state child-care plan as developed by the child-care advisory council. 1993 Amendment: Chapter 304 in definition of day care, after "means", deleted "less than 24-hour out-of-home" and after "care for children" inserted "provided by an adult, other than a parent of the children or other person living with the children as a parent, on a regular basis for daily periods of less than 24 hours"; in definition of day-care center, after "means", inserted "out-of-home"; in first sentence of definition of day-care facility, after "regular basis", inserted "or a place licensed or registered to provide day care on an irregular basis for children suffering from illness", at end of second sentence inserted "or a facility providing care in a child's home for the purpose of meeting registration requirements for the receipt of payments as provided in 52-2-713", and at end of (a) inserted "unless registration or licensure as a day-care facility is required to receive payments as provided in 52-2-713"; in definition of family day-care home, after "children", deleted "from separate families"; in definition of group day-care home, after "residence", inserted "or other structure"; and made minor changes in style.

1991 Amendment: In definition of child increased age from 12 years to 13 years; at end of definition of day-care facility, at end of (b), inserted "that limits its services to children who are 3 years of age or older"; and inserted definition of related by blood or marriage. Amendment effective July 1, 1991.

1989 Amendment: In definitions of day-care facility, day-care center, regular basis, family day-care home, and group day-care home substituted "day care" for "supplemental parental care"; in definition of day care inserted child-care as a defined term and substituted "less-than-24-hour out-of-home care for children, whether that care is for daytime or nighttime hours" for "supplemental parental child care"; deleted definition of supplemental parental child care; and made minor changes in grammar and form.

1987 Amendment: In (2)(d) substituted definition of Department of Family Services for definition of Department of Social and Rehabilitation Services and corrected internal reference.

1981 Amendment: Inserted (1) explaining the purpose of part 5; in definition of day-care facility substituted "provides supplemental parental care on a regular basis. It includes a family day-care home, a day-care center, or a group day-care home" for "receives for care during the day or part of the day three or more children of separate families and continues this type of care for 5 or more consecutive weeks"; substituted definition of day-care center for ""Day-care center" means a day-care facility that receives seven or more children for care for 5 or more hours of the day for 5 or more consecutive weeks. It may include facilities known as child-care centers, nursery schools, day nurseries, and centers for the mentally retarded"; and inserted definitions of day care, supplemental parental child care, regular basis, family day-care home, group day-care home, registration, registrant, registration certificate, license, and licensee.

Compiler's Comments

2001 Amendment: Chapter 505 inserted (2)(g) requiring adoption of rules for day-care centers providing care on irregular basis, including exceptions for immunization records and staffing ratios; inserted (3)(d) allowing issuance of license to receive children on an irregular basis if license applied for; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective July 1, 2002.

Applicability: Section 5, Ch. 505, L. 2001, provided: "[This act] applies to day-care centers, as defined in 52-2-703(3)(a)(ii), operated on or after July 1, 2002." The reference to 52-2-703(3)(a)(ii) originally referred to care provided to children on an irregular basis.

1997 Amendment: Chapter 171 in (2)(b), at end, deleted "after consultation with the local family services advisory councils established under 52-1-203 and the child-care advisory council established in 52-2-705".

Preamble: The preamble attached to Ch. 171, L. 1997, provided: "WHEREAS, the 54th Montana Legislature enacted a bill to combine several state agencies into a new department of public health and human services; and

WHEREAS, it would better serve the needs of Montana to combine the functions and duties and limit the number of advisory councils associated with the department of public health and human services."

1995 Amendments — Composite Section: Chapter 418 in (2)(c) substituted "public health" for "health and environmental sciences". Amendment effective July 1, 1995. The amendment by Ch. 546 rendered the amendment by Ch. 418 void.

Chapter 546 in (1), near beginning, substituted "department is responsible for planning" for "department is designated as the lead agency for the purposes of planning"; and in (2)(c), at end, substituted "administered by all state agencies" for "administered by the department and the departments of social and rehabilitation services, health and environmental sciences, and labor and industry". Amendment effective July 1, 1995.

Transition: Section 499, Ch. 418, L. 1995, provided: "The provisions of 2-15-131 through 2-15-137 apply to [this act]."

Section 571, Ch. 546, L. 1995, was a saving clause.

Effective Date: Section 17, Ch. 692, L. 1989, provided that subsections (1), (2)(a) through (2)(c), and (3) are effective May 19, 1989.

1981 Amendment: Substituted (1) requiring license issuance to persons to receive children in a day-care center on a regular basis for "issue licenses to persons to receive into a day-care facility children for care during the day or part of a day"; in (2) inserted "and publish minimum standards" and "and registration certificates"; substituted (3) providing rulemaking authority for "adopt rules for the conduct of the facilities which are consistent with the welfare of the children received"; inserted (4) requiring registration certificate issuance to persons to receive children into a family or group day-care home on a regular basis; and made a minor change in phraseology.

1997 Amendment: Chapter 318 in (1)(a), at end, inserted "and for improving the availability of quality child care and school-age day care"; inserted (1)(b) stating that program funds may be from legislative appropriations; private gifts, grants, and donations; federal or foundation grants; and any other source; inserted (3) allowing Department grants to increase availability of quality child care and school-age day care and for consumer education and establishing a priority for grant awards; inserted (4) requiring Department rules; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective April 21, 1997.

Preamble: The preamble attached to Ch. 318, L. 1997, provided: "WHEREAS, the "traditional" American family with the father working and the mother at home to care for the children now constitutes only 25% of all American families; and

WHEREAS, an estimated 40,000 of 70,000 Montana children under 6 years of age need child care, while only about 25,000 licensed or registered child-care slots are available; and

WHEREAS, a shortage of before- and after-school programs for school-age children places children at risk for delinquency and teen pregnancy; and

WHEREAS, the availability of day care is critical to the success of welfare-to-work programs; and

WHEREAS, high-quality care is essential to the healthy development of Montana's children, and professional training for child-care providers is the single most effective way to ensure quality care; and

WHEREAS, funding limitations prevent many child-care providers from starting day-care or school-age care businesses and from obtaining professional training."

1997 Statement of Intent: The statement of intent attached to Ch. 318, L. 1997, provided: "A statement of intent is required for this bill because 52-2-711, as amended, directs the department of public health and human services to adopt rules to administer the grant program. It is the intent of the legislature that grant awards be consistent with the legislative priorities set forth in this bill and that additional grants be consistent with the state child-care plan as developed by the child-care advisory council. The department is encouraged to also adopt rules that will formally provide for an advisory task force as previously used to advise the department on grant awards."

2007 Amendment: Chapter 126 near beginning after "pay a" deleted "daily". Amendment effective April 5, 2007.

1981 Amendment: Substituted language establishing a daily payment rate for eligible children as provided by legislative appropriation for "The department shall pay to a licensed day-care facility for each child eligible to receive public financial support not less than $4.50 until December 31, 1980, and $5 thereafter for each day the child attends the facility. For those day-care facilities which meet federal requirements, the department shall pay an additional $1 per day for each eligible child."

52-2-721. License required — registration required — term of license or registration certificate — no fee charged.

Compiler's Comments

2001 Amendment: Chapter 505 near middle of (1)(a) inserted reference to day care provided on regular basis; inserted (6) allowing issuance of license to day-care center providing care on an irregular basis if license applied for; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective July 1, 2002.

Applicability: Section 5, Ch. 505, L. 2001, provided: "[This act] applies to day-care centers, as defined in 52-2-703(3)(a)(ii), operated on or after July 1, 2002." The reference to 52-2-703(3)(a)(ii) originally referred to care provided to children on an irregular basis.

1999 Amendment: Chapter 135 in (4) deleted first sentence that read: "Licenses or registration certificates shall be issued for periods not to exceed 1 year"; inserted (4)(a) allowing issuance of licenses for up to 3 years; inserted (5) limiting 3-year licenses to providers without deficiencies; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective October 1, 1999.

1989 Amendment: In (1) substituted "day care" for "supplemental parental care"; and made minor change in grammar.

1981 Amendment: Substituted language requiring licensure and registration and limiting certificate issuance to 1 year for "No person, group of persons, or corporation shall establish and maintain a day-care facility for children unless licensed to do so by the department. The license shall be valid for 1 year. There shall be no fee for the license."

Case Notes

Previous Admission of Abuse and Neglect Allegations — No Evidentiary Hearing on Denial of Day-Care License Required: Dowell's license to work as a day-care provider was denied after it was learned that Dowell's parental rights had previously been terminated based on a substantiated record of child abuse and neglect. Dowell contended that her due process rights were violated through the state's failure to provide notice and an opportunity for a hearing before substantiating the child abuse and by failing to notify Dowell that substantiation of abuse would result in employment restrictions. The Supreme Court disagreed. Due process does not require development of facts through an evidentiary hearing when there are no material facts in dispute. Because Dowell had previously admitted to the facts underlying the substantiation determination in the previous child abuse case, no further evidentiary hearing was necessary on the day care issue, so no due process violation occurred. Dowell v. Dept. of Public Health and Human Services, 2006 MT 55, 331 M 305, 132 P3d 520 (2006).

52-2-722. Application for a license or registration certificate.

Compiler's Comments

1989 Amendment: In (3), after "the department shall", deleted "investigate to".

1981 Amendment: In (1) inserted "or registration certificate" after "license", deleted "of social and rehabilitation services through the county department of public welfare" before "in the county", and deleted "of social and rehabilitation services. Upon receipt of the application, the county welfare department shall within a reasonable time investigate to determine whether a license should be granted" at the end; in (2) inserted "for a license or registration certificate" after "Applications", deleted "of social and rehabilitation services" after "department" in the first sentence, deleted "county welfare" before "department" and "in the county in which the applicant resides" after "department" in the second sentence, inserted "or registration certificate" after "license", and deleted "This investigation shall be made within a reasonable time" as the last sentence; and inserted (3) requiring Department investigation within 30 days of receipt of application.

Compiler's Comments

1995 Amendments — Composite Section: Chapter 418 in introductory clause substituted "department of public health" for "department of health and environmental sciences". Amendment effective July 1, 1995.

Chapter 546 near beginning substituted "superintendent of public instruction" for "department of health and environmental sciences and superintendent of public instruction". Amendment effective July 1, 1995.

Because the amendment in Ch. 418 was a name change and Ch. 546 deleted the function, the Code Commissioner has codified the substantive change in Ch. 546.

Transition: Section 499, Ch. 418, L. 1995, provided: "The provisions of 2-15-131 through 2-15-137 apply to [this act]."

Saving Clauses: Section 503, Ch. 418, L. 1995, was a saving clause.

Section 571, Ch. 546, L. 1995, was a saving clause.

Preamble: The preamble attached to Ch. 95, L. 1991, provided: "WHEREAS, Rule 16.24.410, Administrative Rules of Montana, requires day-care centers to use only disposable diapers for children unless the parents present medical documentation that nondisposable diapers should be used; and

WHEREAS, Rule 11.14.502, Administrative Rules of Montana, permits the use of nondisposable diapers but requires a child's parent to document the need for nondisposable diapers; and

WHEREAS, the disposal of solid waste is a major problem as landfills reach capacity while the volume of solid waste continues to grow in our present "throw-away" society; and

WHEREAS, 18 billion disposable diapers are thrown away each year in America, accounting by weight for approximately 2% of all municipal solid waste and between 3.5% and 4.5% of all household solid waste; and

WHEREAS, disposable diapers are the third, single-largest manufactured product to be found in landfills and other solid waste disposal sites; and

WHEREAS, disposable diapers in landfills present a threat to the public health and environment because of untreated urine and fecal matter released into the soil and ground water; and

WHEREAS, nondisposable diapers, such as cloth diapers, can be reused many times and their use would reduce the threat to the public health and environment posed by single-use disposable diapers; and

WHEREAS, the use of nondisposable diapers would help alleviate current solid waste problems by reducing the amount of disposable diapers thrown away each year; and

WHEREAS, there is no medical evidence that nondisposable diapers are less sanitary or present a greater threat to the spread of germs than disposable diapers.

THEREFORE, the Legislature finds it appropriate to amend Rules 11.14.502 and 16.24.410, Administrative Rules of Montana, to eliminate current restrictions on the use of nondisposable diapers in day-care facilities in order to allow their use as an alternative to disposable diapers."

1981 Amendment: Deleted first sentence that read: "The department of social and rehabilitation services shall prescribe and publish minimum standards for a license"; in (2) substituted "facilities" for "centers"; in (3) substituted "necessary to ensure the health, safety, safety in transportation" for "essential to the protection of health, safety"; and inserted (7) setting out the standard of ages and numbers of children that may be cared for in a day-care facility.

1991 Statement of Intent: The statement of intent attached to Ch. 165, L. 1991, provided: "A statement of intent is required for this bill because it amends 52-2-735 to require the department of health and environmental sciences [now department of public health and human services] to adopt rules to require children under 5 years of age to be immunized against Haemophilus influenza type "b" before being admitted to a day-care center unless an exemption has been claimed as provided in 20-5-405.

It is the intent of the legislature that the department adopt rules similar to rules established for administration of the school immunization laws, Title 20, chapter 5, part 4.

Furthermore, it is intended that rules allow persons to claim a religious or medical exemption from the immunization requirements contained in 52-2-735 in the same manner as provided in 20-5-405."

Effective Date: Section 4(2), Ch. 165, L. 1991, provided: "[Section 3 [52-3-735] and this section] are effective on passage and approval [approved March 26, 1991], except that rules adopted by the department of health and environmental sciences [now department of public health and human services] may not be implemented prior to July 1, 1991."

1981 Amendment: In (1) deleted "overcrowding" after "hazards of", inserted "inadequate" before "food preparation", inserted "poor nutrition", and deleted "and arrange for any inspections and investigations it considers necessary" at the end; inserted (2) providing for training by local public health authorities and certification upon completion; inserted (3) allowing inspection in lieu of training; in (4), deleted "of social and rehabilitation services" after "department" and substituted "issued pursuant to subsections (2) and (3) before the department will issue a license" for "of approval that the department of health and environmental sciences rules have been met before a license can be issued"; and inserted (5) providing an inspection fee.

Physically Disabled — Community Home Licensing

Part Compiler's Comments

1989 Statement of Intent: The statement of intent attached to Ch. 330, L. 1989, provided: "This bill requires a statement of intent because [section 12] [53-19-205, renumbered 52-4-205] requires the department of family services [now department of public health and human services] to adopt administrative rules for the licensing of community homes for persons with severe disabilities. Licensed community homes are family-oriented residences for persons with severe disabilities who are eligible for services designed to assist persons with severe disabilities in living and functioning independently.

It is the intent of the legislature that, in adopting rules, the department develop licensing requirements to govern the administration, operation, and health and safety of standards of community homes for persons with severe disabilities. The department of health and environmental sciences [now department of public health and human services] and the state fire marshal [now the fire prevention and investigation program of the Department of Justice] shall provide advice and recommendations to the department of family services [now department of public health and human services] in the adoption of licensing requirements for the health and safety of community homes.

The rules for licensing of community homes for persons with severe disabilities may address the following: facility acquisition, facility design, group home staffing, staff training, service goals and design, quality of services, client placement procedure, provider grievance procedure, accounting procedures, including a procedure for the accounting of client personal property and belongings, water and waste disposal, food service, laundry, and fire and life safety standards that are compatible with the residential character of the facility."

Coordination Instruction: Section 15, Ch. 330, L. 1989, authorized the Governor to transfer employees, appropriations, and spending authority to prevent duplication of state services by consolidating and coordinating services provided under Title 53, chapter 19, part 1, with programs and services in Title 53, chapter 7, parts 1 through 3, that are administered by the Department of Social and Rehabilitation Services (now Department of Public Health and Human Services) with funds provided by the federal Rehabilitation Act of 1973.

Case Notes

Requirement for Arrangement of Transportation for Delinquent Youth by District Court Held Constitutional — Counties Required to Pay Transportation Costs Only Within State — Unfunded Mandate Unaddressed: After the District Youth Court found that J.A. was a delinquent youth, the court committed J.A. to the custody of the Department of Corrections (DOC) for placement at a treatment center in Texas and ordered the DOC to pay the costs of transporting J.A. to that center. When the DOC refused to pay those costs, Lake County paid the costs but later challenged the constitutionality of 52-5-109 as being a violation of the doctrine of the separation of powers and, in addition, argued that 52-5-109 is an unfunded mandate in violation of 1-2-116 and that 52-5-109 and this section require Lake County to pay for transportation costs only within Montana. The Supreme Court held that the requirement of 52-5-109 that the District Court "arrange the transportation" of a committed youth does not encroach on judicial authority, require the judiciary to exercise executive power, or interfere with internal judicial operations, but, in the context of the statutes, is only an administrative detail. The Supreme Court also held that it was logical to assume that the DOC, being a Montana state agency, would receive custody only within Montana and not in some other state. The Supreme Court pointed out that this section names only in-state institutions for the commitment of youth and that neither that statute nor 52-5-109 makes any mention of out-of-state facilities and, for those reasons, ruled that the DOC must pay for transportation costs of a committed youth outside of the State of Montana. Because the Supreme Court considered its holding "dispositive", it declined to address the issue of whether 52-5-109 is an unfunded mandate in violation of 1-2-116.
